WE NEED TO TALK
PREVENTING VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN STRATEGY
2013-16
We support our community members – whatever their age, sex, physical ability, socio-economic status, sexuality or cultural background – to feel like they can be active, healthy and valued. We plan and design for our growing city, including safe, healthy and high-quality public spaces.

In June 2012 the City of Melbourne joined the global campaign to stop violence against women by becoming a White Ribbon City.

Our next step was to adopt a strategy for the prevention of violence against women. We Need to Talk: Preventing Violence Against Women Strategy 2013-16 sends a very clear message out into the community: violence against women is intolerable in any form, and we as a city will do everything we can to stop it.

Statistics show us that men’s violent behaviour towards women in Australia is rife: one in three women experience physical violence, just over one in five women experience sexual violence and around 75 women die each year at the hands of violent partners, or former partners.

These are frightening and unacceptable statistics, especially when we know that violence is the leading cause of homelessness among women and children in Melbourne.

This three-year strategy includes 48 actions to tackle violence in the workplace, in the home and in the community. Importantly, it also acknowledges our role in making the city safe and inclusive by changing the culture of violence, urban design, building primary prevention partnerships and delivering services to vulnerable people.

We commend the City of Melbourne’s strategy to help us take an active role in preventing men’s violence against women.

Robert Doyle
Lord Mayor, City of Melbourne

Cr Richard Foster
Chair, People City portfolio
Men’s violence against women is a violation of women’s human rights, sometimes deadly and always unacceptable.

There are various forms of men’s violence against women, such as:
- physical abuse and aggression such as stalking, grabbing, slapping, hitting, kicking, choking and beating (or threats of these acts)
- rape and other forms of sexual coercion, unwanted sexual advances or harassment, forced prostitution and sex trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation
- threatening to hurt people and animals, threatening to hurt themselves as a means to control, blaming others for their behaviour
- intimidation, derogatory name calling, cyber stalking, belittling, humiliation, and other forms of emotional and psychological abuse
- a range of controlling behaviours such as isolating women from their family and friends, monitoring their movements, or restricting their access to money and bank accounts, information, assistance and other resources
- dowry-related violence, female genital mutilation, and other practices harmful to women (VicHealth, 2011).

WHAT WE CAN DO

The City of Melbourne plays a significant role in creating safe public environments, developing community facilities and providing health and community services. As a result we are well placed to take an active role in preventing men’s violence against women. We can drive and embed positive cultural change through our role as a capital city as well as influence appropriate attitudes and behaviours towards women. We also have the ability to demonstrate leadership in resourcing and coordinating strategies with our partners across a spectrum of services and settings.
SOME KEY FACTS

Men’s violence against women in Australia is widespread:

- one in three women have experienced physical violence over the age of 15 (ABS, 2006)
- just over one in five women have experienced sexual violence over the age of 15 (AHRC, 2012)
- around 75 women die every year at the hand of a violent partner or former partner (ABS, 2011)

Violence against women is a prevalent problem with serious health, social and economic consequences. Women exposed to violence are placed at greater risk of developing a range of health problems including stress, anxiety, depression, pain syndromes, phobias and medical symptoms (WHO, 2000).

Intimate partner violence contributes to more ill health and premature death for women aged 15 to 44 in Victoria than any other single factor, including high blood pressure, tobacco and obesity (VicHealth, 2004).

Violence against women has enormous direct and indirect costs for individuals, families, communities, employers and the public sector including health, police, legal and related as well as lost wages and productivity (Department of Families, Housing, Community Services and Indigenous Affairs, 2009 in VicHealth 2010). It was estimated in 2009 that violence against women costs the Australian economy $13.6 billion and in Victoria $3.4 billion.

If appropriate action is not taken to prevent violence, the sum will increase to $15.6 billion per year by 2021, with Victoria’s share of the cost reaching approximately $3.9 billion. However, it was also found that if every violent event experienced by a woman could be prevented, this would save over $20,000 in costs per incident (National Council to Reduce Violence Against Women and Children 2009a in VicHealth 2011).

UNDERLYING CAUSAL FACTORS OF VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Key international frameworks, such as those developed by the World Health Organisation (2002) and VicHealth (2007) identify the key determinants of men’s violence against women as including the following factors:

- unequal power between women and men
- rigid adherence to gender roles
- broader cultures of violence.

OUR PLAN

We aim to prevent men’s violence against women and their children across three settings:

- in the workplace
- in the community
- in the home.
Our approach to preventing men’s violence against women is based on nine principles:

1. Women’s and children’s rights to safety
Women and children have a right to be safe. Violence is a violation of human rights, therefore we have a commitment to exercise due diligence. We need to address the root causes of violence against women and their children, such as structural inequalities between men and women, rigid gendered stereotypes, issues of power and control and gender discrimination.

2. Empowering women to make changes in their lives and society
We need to empower women economically, politically or in other ways, to make changes in their lives and in society.

3. Role of men
Men’s violence against women is an expression of gendered power, that is, the power that men, individually and collectively, have over women and children. We need to support and advocate for prevention programs that target men and acknowledge men’s responsibility as perpetrators of violence. We also need to engage men as positive role models, as pro-social bystanders, cultural change activists in preventing violence against women and as advocates for gender equality in all spheres.

4. Focus on primary prevention and early intervention
By addressing the underlying determinants and contributing factors of men’s violence against women, we can prevent the problem from happening in the first place. Actions need to focus on promoting equal and respectful relationships between men and women; promoting non-violent norms and reducing the effects of prior exposure to violence (especially on children) and improving access to resources and systems of support. Also, refer to Appendix two for the spectrum of strategies in responding to violence against women.

5. Commitment and leadership
Good practices are those that are based on and supported by clear political will from the government, corporate and community sectors. Leaders at all levels and in different settings can influence how men’s violence against women is perceived and can play a pivotal role in changing societal tolerance for this problem.

6. Evidence-based approaches
All interventions need to be underpinned by informed empirical data about the scope of violence against women, its causes and its consequences for individual female victims/survivors, their family members and society at large.

7. Coordination, collaboration and partnerships to bring about change
To be an effective change agent we need to work with a broad range of professionals and services from national to community and grassroots level and forge partner ships across traditional and non traditional sectors.

8. Sharing of knowledge, skills and training
The use of knowledge exchange, educational programs and training should be integrated into routine staff and community development.

9. Monitoring and evaluation
Our strategy, approach and projects will include in its design a plan to monitor and evaluate the progress and impact achieved.
OUR VISION

Melbourne is a safe and inclusive city. Its community shares a culture that ensures women are respected, their opportunities in life are equal and any violence by men against women is condemned.

KEY ACTION AREAS

Setting One - In the workplace
Objectives:
• Ensure a safe and inclusive working environment.
• Increase staff knowledge of the underlying causes of violence against women.
• Support staff to speak out when they are confronted with behaviours and attitudes that support violence, sexism or discrimination.
• Position the City of Melbourne as a leading organisation across Victoria and Australia in the prevention of violence against women and bystander action.

Setting Two - In the community
Objectives:
• Raise awareness of men’s violence against women and children in the community.
• Ensure a safe and inclusive community.
• Foster relationships, organisations, communities and cultures that are gender equitable and non violent.
• Develop city infrastructure that is safe, welcoming and inclusive.

Setting Three - In the home
Objectives:
• Promote supportive, equitable and respectful relationships between men, women and children in families.
• Improve victims/survivors and perpetrators access to resources and systems of support.
• Encourage men to be advocates for social and behavioural change to promote gender equality.

Monitor and Evaluation

Monitoring and evaluation will be built into the Preventing Violence Against Women Strategy so that we can measure and report on the progress, impact and outcomes. The City of Melbourne will report against the actions described in this strategy annually. A formal evaluation and review will be undertaken at the end of the Three Year Action Plan.

Appendix 1

The work of local government in the prevention of violence is underpinned and supported by a wide range of international, national, state and City of Melbourne instruments, legislation and policy including:

International

- United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights
- United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women 1993
- United Nations Convention for the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

National

- Time for Action: National Plan to Reduce Violence against Women and their Children 2010-2022
- Sex Discrimination Act 1984
- Equal Opportunity for Women in the Workplace Act 1999
- Gender Equality Blueprint 2010

State

- Occupational Health and Safety Act 2004
- Children Youth and Family Act 2005
- Child Wellbeing and Safety Act 2005
- Local Government Act 1989
- Family Violence Protection Act 2008
- Victoria’s Action Plan to Address Violence against Women and their Children: Everyone has a responsibility to act 2012-2015
- VicHealth – Preventing violence before it occurs: a framework and background paper to guide the primary prevention of violence against women in Victoria 2007
- Municipal Association of Victoria Preventing Violence Against Women Leadership Statement
- Victorian Government-Family Violence Protection Act 2008

APPENDIX 2

In 2007, the VicHealth Prevention of Violence Against Women Framework and Discussion Paper identified three levels at which strategies to prevent men’s violence against women can be implemented.

Primary prevention – preventing violence before it occurs
Primary prevention strategies seek to prevent violence before it occurs. Interventions can be delivered to the whole population (universal) or to particular groups that are at higher risk of using or experiencing violence in the future (targeted or selective). Some primary prevention strategies focus on changing behaviour and/or building the knowledge and skills of individuals. However, the structural, cultural and societal contexts in which violence occurs are also very important targets for primary prevention. Strategies that do not have a particular focus on violence against women but address its underlying causes (such as gender inequality and poverty) are also primary prevention strategies.

Early intervention strategies - taking action on the early signs of violence
Early intervention (sometimes referred to as secondary prevention) is targeted at individuals and groups who exhibit early signs of perpetrating violent behaviour or of being subject to violence. Early intervention strategies can be aimed at changing behaviours or increasing the skills of individuals and groups. Men’s violence against women takes many forms. It often begins with subtly controlling behaviours and escalates into a pattern of coercion and physical violence. At the individual level early intervention can seek to address controlling behaviours before they become established patterns. Early intervention strategies can also be targeted at environments in which there are strong signs that violence may occur (for example, peer groups or sporting clubs in which there is a strong culture of disrespect for women).

Intervention strategies – intervening after violence has occurred
Intervention (sometimes referred to as tertiary prevention) involves providing support and treatment to women and children who are affected by violence or to men who use violence. Intervention strategies are implemented after violence occurs. They aim to deal with the violence, prevent its consequences (such as mental health problems) and to ensure that it does not occur again or escalate. Intervention includes things such as crisis accommodation and social support for victims and criminal justice and therapeutic interventions for perpetrators.
