infant Melbourne township, the Benevolent Asylum was opened on 27 November 1851 to 'relieve the aged, infirm, disabled or destitute of all creeds and nations' in the town's early days. The asylum was built by the Victoria Benevolent Society, a group of philanthropic citizens determined to house the colony's 'deserving poor' in more dignified fashion than the dreaded workhouses of the new English Poor Law. In accordance with a pattern already established for the development of charities in Victoria, the government granted the land and provided funds to match private subscriptions to build the asylum.

The overwhelming influx of immigrants to Victoria in the early 1850s placed enormous demands on the asylum, which initially served as an immigrants' home, blind asylum, orphanage, lying-in hospital and lunatic asylum. However, as other institutions were established, it focused increasingly on housing the aged poor. The impressive three-storey Tudor-style building on 'Institution Hill', straddling North and West Melbourne, was extended four times in its first 20 years. In 1873 the society commenced negotiations with the Victorian Government about relocating from the overcrowded site, but with no result. The society responded by erecting more wards on the 10-acre (4 ha) site, reaching a capacity of 685 beds. The depression of the 1890s severely strained the resources of the asylum, 878 applicants being turned away in 1892. The asylum finally relocated to a 150-acre (60 ha) site at Cheltenham in 1911 and the old buildings fronting Curzon Street in North Melbourne were demolished. By then almost 15 000 people had been assisted by the society.

With the establishment of other asylums throughout rural Victoria, the Benevolent Asylum was renamed the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum in 1868. Now known as the Kingston Centre, it remains at Cheltenham but provides a vastly different aged care service from its 1850s forerunner.

Description/Notable Features

The house at 33-35 Miller Street is a single-storey, single-fronted Victorian cottage. The walls are of rendered masonry and the hipped corrugated galvanised steel roof is concealed behind a parapet. The verandah spans between wing walls which have decorative console brackets. Alterations include replacement of the verandah roof and front window, and the application of inappropriate ornament to the parapet. A garage has been added to the west of the house. None of the fence elements appears to be original.

Statement of Significance

The house at 33-35 Miller Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. Historically, the house is demonstrative of the early phase of development of the area in the mid-nineteenth century. Aesthetically, although the building has been altered, it relates visually to its neighbours and makes a positive contribution to the streetscape.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. Although the house has been altered, its individual value is reinforced by its setting. The house is a remnant of the mid-Victorian period.

'Benevolent Asylum (Kingston Centre) demolition 1911 Set in rolling green countryside 2 km north-west of the infant Melbourne township, the Benevolent Asylum was opened on 27 November 1851 to 'relieve the aged, infirm, disabled or destitute of all creeds and nations' in the town's early days. The asylum was built by the Victoria Benevolent Society, a group of philanthropic citizens determined to house the colony's 'deserving poor' in more dignified fashion than the dreaded workhouses of the new English Poor Law. In accordance with a pattern already established for the development of charities in Victoria, the government granted the land and provided funds to match private subscriptions to build the asylum.

The overwhelming influx of immigrants to Victoria in the early 1850s placed enormous demands on the asylum, which initially served as an immigrants' home, blind asylum, orphanage, lying-in hospital and lunatic asylum. However, as other institutions were established, it focused increasingly on housing the aged poor. The impressive three-storey Tudor-style building on 'Institution Hill', straddling North and West Melbourne, was extended four times in its first 20 years. In 1873 the society commenced negotiations with the Victorian Government about relocating from the overcrowded site, but with no result. The society responded by erecting more wards on the 10-acre (4 ha) site, reaching a capacity of 685 beds.

The depression of the 1890s severely strained the resources of the asylum, 878 applicants being turned away in 1892. The asylum finally relocated to a 150-acre (60 ha) site at Cheltenham in 1911 and the old buildings fronting Curzon Street in North Melbourne were demolished. By then almost 15 000 people had been assisted by the society.

With the establishment of other asylums throughout rural Victoria, the Benevolent Asylum was renamed the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum in 1868. Now known as the Kingston Centre, it remains at Cheltenham but provides a vastly different aged care service from its 1850s forerunner.

Valkyrie

`The Ride of the Valkyrs (1909) by John Charles Dollman
In Norse mythology, a valkyrie (from Old Norse valkyrja "chooser of the slain") is one of a host of female figures who choose those who may die in battle and those who may live. Selecting among half of those who die in battle (the other half go to the goddess Freyja's afterlife field Fólkvangr), the valkyries bring their chosen to the afterlife hall of the slain, Valhalla, ruled over by the god Odin. There, the deceased warriors become einherjar (Old Norse "single (or once) fighters"[1]). When the einherjar are not preparing for the events of Ragnarök, the valkyries bear them mead. Valkyries also appear as lovers of heroes and other mortals, where they are sometimes described as the daughters of royalty, sometimes accompanied by ravens and sometimes connected to swans or horses.

Valkyries are attested in the Poetic Edda, a book of poems compiled in the 13th century from earlier traditional sources; the Prose Edda and Heimskringla (by Snorri Sturluson), and Njáls saga, a Saga of Icelanders, all written in the 13th century. They appear throughout the poetry of skalds, in a 14th-century charm, and in various runic inscriptions.'

`Benevolent Asylum (Kingston Centre) demolition 1911
 Set in rolling green countryside 2 km north-west of the infant Melbourne township, the Benevolent Asylum was opened on 27 November 1851 to 'relieve the aged, infirm, disabled or destitute of all creeds and nations' in the town's early days. The asylum was built by the Victoria Benevolent Society, a group of philanthropic citizens determined to house the colony's 'deserving poor' in more dignified fashion than the dreaded workhouses of the new English Poor Law. In accordance with a pattern already established for the development of charities in Victoria, the government granted the land and provided funds to match private subscriptions to build the asylum. The overwhelming influx of immigrants to Victoria in the early 1850s placed enormous demands on the asylum, which initially served as an immigrants' home, blind asylum, orphanage, lying-in hospital and lunatic asylum. However, as other institutions were established, it focused increasingly on housing the aged poor. The impressive three-storey Tudor-style building on 'Institution Hill', straddling North and West Melbourne, was extended four times in its first 20 years. In 1873 the society commenced negotiations with the Victorian Government about relocating from the overcrowded site, but with no result. The society responded by erecting more wards on the 10-acre (4 ha) site, reaching a capacity of 685 beds. The depression of the 1890s severely strained the resources of the asylum, 878 applicants being turned away in 1892. The asylum finally relocated to a 150-acre (60 ha) site at Cheltenham in 1911 and the old buildings fronting Curzon Street in North Melbourne were demolished. By then almost 15 000 people had been assisted by the society. With the establishment of other asylums throughout rural Victoria, the Benevolent Asylum was renamed the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum in 1868. Now known as the Kingston Centre, it remains at Cheltenham but provides a vastly different aged care service from its 1850s forerunner.

SURVEYED PLACES

'North Melbourne Courier and West Melbourne Advertiser' (Vic. : 1895 - 1913) Friday 7 May 1897

'DEATH OF MR. H- H. BINDON, J.P.

On Tuesday, shortly after 10 a.m., an old identity of North and West Melbourne passed away,' in the person of Mr Henry Herbert Bindon, J.P., who expired at his residence, Miller-street, West Melbourne, at tile age of 63 years.

The deceased gentleman has been ailing about 10 weeks, and was recently operated on, but afterwards it was not thought he would last very long, and his medical adviser, Dr. Archibald Black, shared in the general opinion. The whole system was internally impaired, but cancer of the stomach was the most malignant feature of his disorder. Mr. Bindon was born at Portsmouth, England, and was tile son of Major Bindon, of the British army, and a nephew of the late Judge Bindon, of the Victorian County Court Bench. He was a fellow student of Admiral Cyprian Bridge, now in command of the Australian Squadron. He was educated for the army, and the following extract from the Newfoundland Times (America) dated March 7th, 1855, refers to him as under :-"26th Foot-Henry Herbert Bindon, gentleman... son of Major Bindon, resident here." How ever, a military career was not to Mr. Bindon's tastes, and he did not follow it, but soon relinquished it for service in the mercantile marine. As a sailor he made many voyages to and from all parts of the world, and he gained wide knowledge, which stood him in good service in after years; and the possession of which it was easy to discern when conversing with him. Arriving in this colony at the end of the fifties, he entered the service of the old Melbourne and Hobson's Bay Railway Company, and afterwards-that-of-the Victorian Railways, and speedily rose to the rank of first-class driver. Harry Bindon was a household word in the station buildings, in the yard, in the running sheds, and on the footplates; and he, at the time of his resignation, was regarded by his fellow enginemen as quite an institution, and their guide, philosopher, and friend." Subsequent to his resignation, Mr. Bindon engaged in business for himself,-and continued-to evince those faculties of shrewdness and common sense which his long and varied career had endowed him with.. About six years ago he was gazetted a justice of the peace, and has sat regularly (up to his last illness) on the North Melbourne bench, and also frequently at the City and District courts. .He filled the position of assessor in connection with the City Council for about nine years, and as deputy returning officer was a- prominent -figure--at local parliamentary elections. He was also a member of the West Melbourne Board of Advice for about 5 years. As magistrate he was very painstaking, and on holidays, while others were enjoying themselves, would make the rounds of the North and West Melbourne, City, Bourke-street west, and other lockups, discharging the drunkards and remanding other offenders. The above gentleman formerly resided in Port Melbourne but has been a citizen of West Melbourne for about fifteen years. He leaves a widow and a family of two sons and four daughters to mourn his loss, whom, we have no doubt, are the objects of widespread sympathy and condolence. In disposition Mr. Bindon was straight forward and candid. He possessed generous impulses, and did many little acts of unknown and unchronicled kindness. Genuine distress had his ready sympathy, and he was a man of action rather than sentiment. One thing he was utterly unable to do, and that was to cherish resentment, and even regarding those with whom he had differences he retained no feeling of enmity.

The funeral took place yesterday at ... and was largely attended. The remains were interred in the Melbourne General Cemetery. A portion of the burial service-I was read by Canon-Carrlisle in St. Mary's, Queensberry-street, and the latter part by the same gentleman, at the grave. The town hall flag was flying half-mast out of respect to the deceased during Wednesday and yesterday. A number of beautiful wreaths and floral tributes were forwarded by friends as tokens of regard and sympathy. Among the donors were Messes. W.B. Simpson, W. B. Crocket, Pupils of the Parkville Ladies' College, Mrs. Oliphant, Mises Russell, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. and Miss Clack, Mrs. Sutcliffe, Mr. Keys, and others. The funeral arrangements were conducted by Alfred Allison, of 221 Victoria-street, West Melbourne. '

`Old West Melbourne...

`TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir, — I "have been much interested In the letters about old identities of North Melbourne, and would like to hear of some of the old West Melbourne folk. In my day the Benevolent Asylum faced Curzon-street and .was surrounded by spacious grounds, bounded by Curzon, Miller." Abbotsford and Elm streets. Victoria-street ended abruptly at the front gate and then continued on the other side at Abbotsford-street. I can still hear in memory the old asylum bell ringing in the evening, and see the old folk walking round the tree-sheltered grounds. I remember seeing the superintendent, with his bag and white top hat, letting himself in at-a private gate in Abbotsford-street. We lived on a block almost every house on which was occupied by an old Scotch family. There were the Ramages, Simpsons, Robertsons, Flndlays, Bagleys, Swanstons, Alders, Watsons, Crystals, McBeans and others. The grocery store at the -comer of Lothian and Miller streets was kept by the O'Brien family, the butcher's shop near them by Swanby, and afterwards by Read. Other old families within half a mile included the Landers, Ingrams, Binyons, Dotts, Crockets, Youngs, Smiths, Overs, Modnetts, Sels, Whiles, Irvines. The streets were lit by gas lamps. I remember the electric light being installed, also sewerage. Does anyone remember Cranky Fred the "bottle-oh," who used to go down on his knees and pray for the bad boys who stood and laughed. They would say "Pray, Fred," and down he would go. In those days West Melbourne was a quiet, select spot. Everyone seemed to know everyone else.—

Yours, &c,, ANCIENT. Rupanyup, 11th September'

Description/Notable Features

Simply elevated, this stone house represents the Colonial Georgian style continued here from British practice, the nature of the stone lending local content. It is parapeted, symmetrical and faced with basalt masonry with dressed quoins plinth and sills. The side-walls are coursed rubble. Statement of Significance

SURVEYED PLACES

A simply detailed stone house which is both early for its locality and representative of a part of the locality's early history i.e.. Stone quarrying along the Moonee Ponds and Maribyrnong River. Given its construction date of 1861, it is part of a small group of stone parapeted detached houses built during this decade in the state, the parapeted form being more demanding to construct and more common in commercial stone buildings.

Recommended Alterations

The house is considered of regional or metropolitan significance i.e.. heritage level B. Fence replaced; door replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) Stone painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

Other Comments

External Integrity - The fence (presumed timber picket) and the door has been replaced; new tiles added to sill (?); new concrete paving at front and new roofing. Other sundry service lines and out buildings have also been added.

Streetscape - Prominently sited on an elevated corner overlooking the bay and railway yards but in a mixed streetscape of industrial and residential uses.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

(completed after 1983)

History

Robert Finlay commissioned builder, William Little of Barkly Street to erect a 'cottage' at Miller Street in 1861.

He occupied what was valued as a stone house with four rooms on land 30 x 100 feet. The description and occupancy varied little in the next forty years. During that period Finlay's occupation is unclear. A Robert Finlay was a silversmith on the South Bank of the Yarra River in the 1880s and, later, a shipwright, but this Robert Finlay appeared to live in South Melbourne. The vantage point of the house, overlooking the bay, may be related. In electoral rolls of c1900, Finlay is described as a 'gentleman' or 'independent means'. He lived there with Elspeth (his wife?) and Bessie (his daughter ?) who was a seamstress.

Ann C. O'Brien (Mrs Anne O'Brien lived off 40 Lt. Lonsdale Street in c1900) owned the house from the early 1900s, until the Victorian Iron Rolling Co. Pty.'s tenure of the early 1920s. By then the house was five rooms and the land 33 x171 feet and, by c1940, it was 6 rooms but 33 feet x111, later owner-occupiers were Herbert Jarnes & Edward Allan Ng Tye Din, fruiterers.

Description

Simply elevated, this stone house represents the Colonial Georgian style continued here from British practice, the nature of the stone lending local content. It is parapeted, symmetrical and faced with basalt masonry with dressed quoins plinth and sills. The side-walls are coursed rubble.

External Integrity

The fence (presumed timber picket) and the door has been replaced; new tiles added to sill (?); new concrete paving at front and new roofing. Other sundry service lines and out buildings have also been added.

Streetscape

Prominently sited on an elevated corner overlooking the bay and railway yards but in a mixed streetscape of industrial and residential uses.

Significance

A simply detailed stone house which is both early for its locality and representative of a part of the locality's early history i.e.. Stone quarrying along the Moonee Ponds and Maribyrnong River. Given its construction date of 1861, it is part of a small group of stone parapeted detached houses built during this decade in the state, the parapeted form being more demanding to construct and more common in commercial stone buildings.

Graeme Butler & Associates 2015: Appendix 2:

‘Gin found a ready market when it was first introduced into England from Holland in the 1690s. It was far cheaper than wine or brandy and easily distilled making it a common brew for many people struggling to survive in the squalor of urban living in the eighteenth century. [1] It was later, in the nineteenth century, that Gilbey’s gin was first produced and not until the 1930s that the company responsible for its production came to Moorabbin.

Two brothers, Walter and Alfred Gilbey, and a friend, Henry Gold, first started the Gilbey company. Returning from the Crimean War in 1857 they established a small cellar in London where they sold port, sherry and brandy. With advertisements in the local papers their enterprise thrived to the extent they were able to open a branch in Dublin. It was in 1872 that they expanded further by opening a gin distillery, and fifteen years later, their first Scotch whisky distillery. [2]

Fred Collins, manager of the advertising department of Gilbey’s, migrated to Australia in the early 1880s because of poor health, but he kept contact with his former employers. Perhaps because of this contact and Collins’ assessment of a potential market, the Gilbey brothers decided to use him to develop the Australian and New Zealand trade. By 1927 Gilbey’s imported produce was facing increased competition from locally produced gin, so the company adopted the strategy of shipping their product at a higher strength in drums to be rebottled in Australia, effecting a considerable saving in duty and enabling the price to the consumer to be brought down to meet local competition. A site for the bottling establishment was purchased in West Melbourne but in the 1930s it was decided to construct a distillery and bottling plant in Moorabbin...’

Mr. Forde congratulated the company by telegram Welcoming the visitors, Mr. Collins said that the company had shown its confidence in Australia by investing its capital here Moreover, it was a very large holder of Commonwealth bonds (Hear, hear.) He hoped that the Commonwealth Government would always insist that bottling be done in bond to ensure the purity of liquor Mr. J R Davidson, sales manager for Tooth and Co Ltd., Sydney. Winter 2012: 14 a terrace, dropped into a row of other houses, or continuing a suburban street pattern. Here a convergence of later ideas was brought to bear: mixed urban use as prescribed by Jane Jacobs in 1963¹⁷ seemed more reachable if you integrated new housing visually within older suburbs. And concerns about social stigma of conspicuously different housing projects could be addressed by embedding new houses in established streets. The revision of a-contextual modernism, and its excessive focus on industrial and production imagery, could be addressed by a return to contextual linkage through older and distinctively local textures, colour, material and forms. The Carlton and North Fitzroy housing of Station, Kay, and Canning Streets, the incursions there by Edmond and Corrigan, Greg Burgess, Peter Crone and Norman Day, accompanied by the act of buying older houses (establishing a new social role and meaning in that process).

By 1983-4 this genre had expanded to larger groupings of 26, as with Leo development Jong's Public Works development in North Melbourne of up to over 100 or more units; also Cox and Carmichael's Highbury development... (image) Capel Street Housing, West Melbourne, Peter Elliott (1988)¹⁸

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History - These shops and residences were all built c1865, possibly by Thomas Pearson a contractor, who retained 61 and 63 Peel Street and sold the other two to Mrs. Chadwick, possibly the wife of Thomas Chadwick, a publican of Flemington. Pearson lived in one of his houses until he sold them in 1871, later owners being Mrs. Lawson and Mrs. White who owned them for over twenty years. Mrs. Chadwick's houses were sold in 1878, later owners being A. &M. McSweeney. Some of the tenants were of quite long-standing e.g. John Geary and Miss Mary Geary, a music teacher; probably his sister. (1870-1885); Bridget Gaffney (1881-1897). 3 (McSweeney -refer 333-5 Queensberry Street). Of note is a permit application for one two-storey house in Peel Street, by Mrs. Chadwick in 1864; the builder was Charles Fewster. However, whether built by Fewster or Pearson, all houses have similar characteristics. 4

Description - A row of parapeted two-storey houses with formerly two level cast-iron and timber verandahs which are now partly shop fronts. 61-3 has a gabled parapet entablature, with scrolls, which bears the name 'Peel Terrace A.D. 1868' (rate books give an addition of two rooms per house in 1869, which indicates general improvements in 1868 5), 57 has simple corniced parapets. Common brick and stucco corniced chimneys are shared by the row, as is the stucco side-wall ornament: however, 61-3 is face brick and 57-9 stucco faced.
 Iron patterns also differ as do the verandah posts (round section foliated capitals on 57-9, square section capitals and posts on 61-3).

Integrity - Shop fronts have replaced all the ground levels and associated windows, doors decoration and fences, sometime early this century; chimney cornice is part gone on 61 and the whole chimney gone on 57; cast-iron friezes (if they existed) are gone from 61-3 and the balustrading obscured (or removed) on 59-61; the face-brick of 61-3 has been painted; parapet orbs/balls are missing generally, see 63.

Streetscape - Part of a varied formerly residential streetscape of low integrity, relating to 65 (built for John Brown in 1865) and by scale, form and siting, to 55.

Significance

Architecturally, early examples of a common type but much altered, being changed in use, and part of an isolated group of mixed use structures: of local importance.

Historically, indicative of former generally residential nature of street, also an example (part), of owner-builder speculation: of local interest.

Recommendations

Consider restoration to residential use including rezoning to Special Resident 2 or similar; consider restoration of existing period elements by removal of upper level signs, restoration of cast-iron and parapet balls and repainting in typical or original colours.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History - These shops and residences were all built c1865, possibly by Thomas Pearson a contractor, who retained 61 and 63 Peel Street and sold the other two to Mrs. Chadwick, possibly the wife of Thomas Chadwick, a publican of Flemington. Pearson lived in one of his houses until he sold them in 1871, later owners being Mrs. Lawson and Mrs. White who owned them for over twenty years. Mrs. Chadwick's houses were sold in 1878, later owners being A. & M. McSweeney. Some of the tenants were of quite long-standing e.g. John Geary and Miss Mary Geary, a music teacher; probably his sister. (1870-1885); Bridget Gaffney (1881-1897). 3 (McSweeney -refer 333-5 Queensberry Street). Of note is a permit application for one two-storey house in Peel Street, by Mrs. Chadwick in 1864; the builder was Charles Fewster. However, whether built by Fewster or Pearson, all houses have similar characteristics. 4

Description - A row of parapeted two-storey houses with formerly two level cast-iron and timber verandahs which are now partly shop fronts. 61-3 has a gabled parapet entablature, with scrolls, which bears the name 'Peel Terrace A.D. 1868' (rate books give an addition of two rooms per house in 1869, which indicates general improvements in 1868 5, 57 has simple corniced parapets. Common brick and stucco corniced chimneys are shared by the row, as is the stucco side-wall ornament: however, 61-3 is face brick and 57-9 stucco faced.

Iron patterns also differ as do the verandah posts (round section foliated capitals on 57-9, square section capitals and posts on 61-3).

Integrity - Shop fronts have replaced all the ground levels and associated windows, doors decoration and fences, sometime early this century; chimney cornice is part gone on 61 and the whole chimney gone on 57; cast-iron friezes (if they existed) are gone from 61-3 and the balustrading obscured (or removed) on 59-61; the face-brick of 61-3 has been painted; parapet orbs/balls are missing generally, see 63.

Streetscape - Part of a varied formerly residential streetscape of low integrity, relating to 65 (built for John Brown in 1865) and by scale, form and siting, to 55.

Significance

Architecturally, early examples of a common type but much altered, being changed in use, and part of an isolated group of mixed use structures: of local importance.

Historically, indicative of former generally residential nature of street, also an example (part), of owner-builder speculation: of local interest.

Recommendations

Consider restoration to residential use including re-zoning to Special Resident 2 or similar; consider restoration of existing period elements by removal of upper level signs, restoration of cast-iron and parapet balls and repainting in typical or original colours.

'Originally called the NEST house (abbreviation for New Expanding Shelter Technology)

Designed to accommodate the expanding or extended family within one building 3 levels on a small inner city footprint at the time.

There was also construction innovation with the engineered three level timber frame clad with a new material at the time Hebel light weight concrete block. The U shaped plan with party wall configuration was designed for repetition, forming quadrangle structures creating higher density low rise development.'

SURVEYED PLACES

What is significant?

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is a three storey stone and brick shop, residence and store complex. It contains fabric from several different periods of building and alteration. The earliest section dates from the early gold rush era, while three storey additions were made in 1859 and the ground floor of the rear store/factory section probably dates from the 1860s. An 1869 photograph of the building showed a loggia, but this has been filled with windows.

How is it significant?

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical and architectural significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical significance as one of the oldest examples of a commercial building and factory in the State. Its King Street facade contains rare gold rush-era elements, from a time when King Street was an unmade although busy road with bullock drays and other carriers' wagons, loaded with goods, continually passing on their way to Bendigo and the other diggings. The factory proper dates from the 1860s and provides important evidence of the character of early industrial organisation in Melbourne. The Phoenix Clothing Company was established in the wake of post gold rush metropolitan growth and benefited from the introduction of tariff legislation in the 1870s. The Phoenix factory was one of the few mechanised 19th century clothing manufacturers, and has been credited with introducing advanced overseas technology to Victoria. Although there have been many structural changes to the building over the years, the essential design and structure of the complex provide a substantially intact representation of contemporary factory design and working conditions, and of aspects of 19th century building technology.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical significance as evidence of the character of Melbourne's early development. The combination of residence, shop and factory is a reminder of a time when the city was much more compact, and residence and workplace were often located in the same building or very nearby. The building also demonstrates the long-term continuity of industrial usage in this part of Melbourne.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical significance for its associations with the notable Fenwick Brothers, and Albion T. Walkley. The Fenwick Brothers were London clothing manufacturers and importers, who owned the site from the 1850s and established the Phoenix Clothing Company there in the 1870s. Orlando Fenwick (1822-1897) who once lived on the premises, was a prominent Victorian clothing manufacturer and importer. He also took a leading role in Melbourne harbour development schemes and was a Melbourne City councillor over a long period and Mayor of the city. Walkley, the factory manager from 1875 and owner of the manufacturing section of the business from 1878, was responsible for introducing into the Victorian clothing trade the innovative mechanical knife system of cutting which revolutionised the industry in the pre-WW1 period.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of architectural significance because of its first floor loggia, perhaps the earliest example in Melbourne (although it has subsequently been built in, it is restorable) and as part of a coherent mid-19th century commercial streetscape which gives some idea of the architectural character of this part of Melbourne in the post-gold rush period. - See more at:

He also took a leading role in Melbourne harbour development schemes and was a Melbourne City councillor over a long period and Mayor of the city. Walkley, the factory manager from 1875 and owner of the manufacturing section of the business from 1878, was responsible for introducing into the Victorian clothing trade the innovative mechanical knife system of cutting which revolutionised the industry in the pre-WW1 period.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of architectural significance because of its first floor loggia, perhaps the earliest example in Melbourne (although it has subsequently been built in, it is restorable) and as part of a coherent mid-19th century commercial streetscape which gives some idea of the architectural character of this part of Melbourne in the post-gold rush period. - See more at:

Hennessy Bros. commenced trading from this site in c.1927, although it is possible that the group of shops was constructed much earlier. In 1875, rate books list Richard English owning two brick houses, with three rooms each, and a brick store of eight rooms. In 1881, these buildings are first described as two brick shops, each with three rooms, and a brick house with two rooms and a store, presumably at the rear. Hennessy Bros. ran a bakery from site until the 1950s, with other business in t

Description/Notable Features

The Hennessy Bros. building is a single-storey inter-War shop constructed of rendered brick. The rendered parapet with a central pediment is the principal element of the building, containing the words 'HENNESSY BROS BAKERS' in large, raised rendered lettering. The shopfront beneath the canopy has been altered.

Statement of Significance

The Hennessy Bros. building at 287-291 Victoria Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical interest. The building is demonstrative of inter-War commercial development in the area. Except for the shopfronts the building is relatively intact; the elegant parapet signage is of particular note.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The building is a good and relatively intact example of its style and type.

Designed in 1873 by architects, Terry and Oakden and built in 1875-6 for the recently formed Victorian Education Department, the West Melbourne State School is of State significance as an externally near original prize winner from the state-wide 1873 competition held to establish prototypes for the future schools built for the Department. Although this school design was known to be used only once, and resulted from a decision to award the judges (as well as the contestants) prizes, the publicity which accompanied the competition must have been influential, either directly or indirectly, in shaping the massive amount of school construction carried out by the Department until new stylistic directions followed in the early 1900s.

The school is also of local importance as a long-term public building in West Melbourne and the extensive documentation of its function through building plans, building files and student rolls allow further historic interpretation of the site and enhance its historical significance.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983): V1: 255 Eades Place

History - During 1875, the present school building was erected at a cost of 6,749 pounds, with Percy Walker, who had been head master of St. Mary's Anglican School in Howard Street, in charge. By 1876, there were 2,313 children on the roll, although the average attendance was around 955, with a staff of twenty-six. By the end of the century, the attendance had decreased to 750. Repair work had to be carried out in 1910, after a period of decline since the day in 1838, when it was... 'ranked with the cleanest in the city.'¹ This school was one of 13 schools of 3 differing categories offering prizes in a 1873 competition amongst private architects arranged by the new education ministry. (SS 1402, Errol Street was another). Architects, Terry and Oakden won this commission, although in retrospect, the design did not become a pattern for future schools as others did.²

Description - A face brick and stucco school of two-levels arranged in a slated gabled roof E-plan, with a central entrance wing and bellcote over. Buttresses and both Gothic and Tudor-arched openings created an almost ecclesiastical flavour. Quatrefoil piercing and window hood moulds are further Medieval (English) elements, as is the oculus under the bellcote, although of more Italian origin. Other similar schools included S.S. 1396 at Brighton 1874; S.S. 1270 at Buninyong (trussed gables), 1873 and SS 1436 at Mount Pleasant.

Integrity - Other detached wings have been added within the grounds; the presumed timber picket fence has been replaced.

Streetscape - Bounding the west side of the Eades Place precinct.

Significance - Architecturally, distinguished by the lack of replication of the design meted out to others from the- 1873 competition but taken as part of the whole, it was influential on all following designs within the Education Department, until the 1920s, by underscoring the Medieval precedent for school design. It is also a contemporary part of the Eades Place precinct: of high regional importance.

Historically, West Melbourne's only State School and the second State School in the study area: of local importance.

Recommendations - Restore picket fence to original or typical details (Refer Burchell, p,97 photograph); repaint trim in original or typical colours.

`QUEENBERRY STREET STATE SCHOOL.

THE NEW TEACHER Mr. DANIEL GILCHRIST.

As so much has been said of late about the respective claims of Mr. Daniel Gilchrist and Mr Peter Madden to the new state school in Hotham it may not be out of place to let our readers see that in appointing Mr. Gilchrist the department have acted with a simple regard to honour and justice.

Mr. Gilchrist has been teaching in the Government schools of this colony for about 28 years, 14 of which he has been in charge of schools in the Hotham district, whereas Mr. Madden did not come into the service of the Government until some six years ago, when he left St. Mary's Roman Catholic school in West Melbourne and joined the State schools. Even if Mr Madden's time in St. Mary's school be added to his time in the State school he is left many years the junior of Mr. Gilchrist in the service. Then, again, Mr. Gilchrist is one of the few teachers who hold their classification with honors. In this again he is distinguished from Mr. Madden. His teaching, too, has produced first-class results. During five consecutive years his school in Hotham averaged nearly 90 per cent, one year being almost 93 per cent. We believe also that he holds a certificate of qualification to give instruction in military drill-a very useful qualification for a man having charge of so large a school as the one now under his care. In addition to this, his academical standing is worth noticing.

He is a member of the universities of Aberdeen and Melbourne. While a student at Aberdeen he was a prizeman in Latin and Greek, and obtained a first place in order of merit in the class of natural history. These qualifications will satisfy the public that he is the right man in the right place. A school so large should have a man of some standing and experience at its head. But in addition to his qualifications for the position it has been pointed out that his appointment was made in pursuance of a promise given by the Education Department about five years ago.....' MADDEN.—On the 19th inst., at her residence, No. 68 Roden street, West Melbourne, Mary, the beloved wife of Peter Madden, teacher, of liver disease, aged 47 years.'

`The Coburg Leader' (Vic. : 1890 - 1913) Saturday 21 July 1894

`Last week's Government Gazette publishes the annual classified roll of State schools and State school teachers. We note that Mr. Albert Mattingley is the first in the order of seniority of heal teachers, holding certificates 2nd Class Honors, singing and drawing, and having unbroken service from the 1st June, 1857. Mr. Peter Madden, long of our town, but now at Footscray, is 17th, and holds a Certificate of Competency and Science with service since August 21, 1866. Mr. George H. Carter, of West Melbourne, stands at No. 36 with a Certificate of Competency and Drill, and dates from 1st October, 1866. It goes without risk of denial that between the two first-named gentlemen most of the youth of North and West Melbourne since the 50's were handled by them, and mentally shod for the world's rough usage. `Early in 1869 Mr. Peter Madden took charge of St. Mary's Boys' School, and held that post till State aid was withdrawn, about 1876. His assistants were Luke Nugent and Wm. Under the Education Act, Mr. Madden passed into the State department, and was stationed at Footscray for many years, he died last year, on his way from the old country to Melbourne, and was buried in the Atlantic. Noone biography

John Noone

Artist (Printmaker), Artist (Photographer)

A photographer and lithographer. He was the official photographer of the Melbourne Public Library and Museum and exhibited his work within Australia as well as in London. He is most well known for his photographs of early Melbourne.....

professional photographer, lithographer and printer, claimed to have 'the oldest established [photographic] studio' at Melbourne in 1858. On 8 September his sensational advertisement was published in the Melbourne Argus : 'J. Noone, 9 Collins St. W. With a view to giving the utmost publicity to his Photographic Establishment, has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Township of Talbot for distribution of 700 ALLOTMENTS therein to all persons who shall have portraits taken at his establishment during the ensuing two months. Portrait + allotment of land for 1 guinea'.

Although indicative of the publicity then needed to counter the increasingly competitive photographic studios in Melbourne, this was not perhaps quite as generous as it seemed. The allotment system (still current in parts of Britain) allowed applicants to cultivate a tiny plot of land and, at most, erect a garden shed on it; if not utilised appropriately the plot would be reallocated, and Talbot was hardly the metropolis. Nevertheless, whatever the conditions, Noone's offer proved so popular that all available allotments were claimed within a few weeks.

From 1858 to 1862 Noone continued to advertise as an artist and photographer of Collins Street. Most appositely, he was subsequently employed as a photographer in the Victorian Crown Lands Office (1866-88), showing photolithographed maps and plans he had executed for the department in the 1866 Melbourne Intercolonial Exhibition. He was also the official photographer for the Melbourne Public Library and Museum. At the 1869 Melbourne Public Library Exhibition, held at the Library, he exhibited 42 photographs from its Dresden Gallery collection which he had taken in the course of his employment, together with five photolithographs 'after Albert [sic] Durer'. The Public Library and Gallery trustees exhibited a further 12 of his Durer photolithographs, published as The Albert Durer Album (Melbourne 1869), and sent two of them to the 1873 London International Exhibition. Noone himself showed 12 photographs of Melbourne.

Photolithography was a Melbourne speciality, having been invented there in August 1859 by John Walter Osborne . On 27 September 1870 the Sydney Morning Herald noted that 'beautiful specimens' had been included in the Victorian court at the Sydney Intercolonial Exhibition, 'exhibited by Mr John Noone, who now carries on Osborne's process'. His 42 photolithographs of wood-engravings (the Dresden Gallery collection again) and two unnamed specimens (presumably the Durers) were together awarded a bronze medal. Other photolithographs he produced at the Crown Lands Office included James Meek 's Chronological Tree of the History of Victoria .

Noone is also known for his photographs of early Melbourne (La Trobe Library), including a series of views of the city and its major buildings taken in December 1869 from the tower of Dr Fitzgerald's residence in Lonsdale Street West for presentation to the officers of HM Flying Squadron, 'by order of the Hon. James McKean, Commissioner of Crown Lands & Survey, and President of the Board of Land and Works'. In the photography section of the 1870 Sydney Intercolonial Exhibition he showed seven views of Melbourne which were commended by the jury. Others appeared in later exhibitions in London and Sydney as well as Melbourne.

`Athlunkard Street, Limerick

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Athlunkard Street (Irish: Sráid Áth Longphuirt) is a street on King's Island, in Limerick City, Ireland. The street ends at the Abbey River, at the O'Dwyer Bridge. On its other end, after its intersection with Mary and Nicholas streets across the way from St. Mary's Cathedral, Athlunkard Street continues on to Matthew Bridge under the name Bridge Street.

Via the O'Dwyer Bridge and Athlunkard Avenue in Corbally, Athlunkard Street in Limerick leads toward the Athlunkard Bridge in Corbally, across the River Shannon from the townland of Athlunkard, County Clare, the Irish name of which, Áth Longphuirt, meaning "ford of the longphort," refers to a 9th-century Viking longphort (defended ship encampment) once located at that ford over the Shannon.[1]'

'Table Talk' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1885 - 1939) Friday 4 December 1896 p 7 Article

'MB, Thomas Bowden, of Roden-street, West Melbourne, is being sued in the Supreme Court of Victoria (by Martin Tobin) for "improperly and maliciously attaching the wages of the plaintiff in the Railway Department." Damages are laid at £500'.

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Thursday 11 February 1897 p 4 Article

'The legal profession was yesterday robbed of a client in an action before Mr Justice Williams in the Banco Court, in which the plaintiff, Martin Tobin, an employee in the Railway department, conducted his own case, and sought to recover £1,000 damages for slanders alleged to have been uttered by the defendant, Thomas Bowden, plaintiff's landlord, and an ex-railway employee. Plaintiff states that in 1891 the defendant spoke to a man named White the words that plaintiff was a rogue, and swindled him out of his property, and that he (the defendant) would get plaintiff sacked from the Railway department. Plaintiff also alleged that in 1892 defendant uttered to one John M'Guinness the words that the plaintiff was a swindler, and has robbed him of his property. Defendant denied both these allegations. Plaintiff, in cross-examination, said that he had brought a similar action in the County Court in 1892, but was non-suited, with costs. His Honour held that the plaintiff had failed to prove either of the allegations, and gave a verdict for the defendant, with costs. Mr. Woinarski, instructed by Messrs. Mills, Son and Oakley, appeared for the defendant.'

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Wednesday 11 May 1904 p 6 Article

'An old-time litigant appeared in the Practice Court yesterday, in the person of Martin Tobin, of A'Beckett-Street. This gentleman's litigious ventures some dozen years ago were so persistent that a direction was made by the Chief Justice prohibiting the issue of any writs at his instance, without the sanction of a judge. Recently Tobin's ancient grievance suffered resurrection by his issue of a writ against Thomas Bowden, of West Melbourne, a former landlord, who is alleged to have been the cause of Tobin's' misfortunes. The claim, in this action was for £2,000 damages for malicious prosecution, in attaching his wages in' the hands of the Railway department...'

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History - Robert Tait had owned a smaller building on this site before this house was built in 1877 as part of a row. He continued to own and reside there until after 1895.

Description - A two-storey, parapeted, stuccoed brick house with a two-level cast-iron verandah, front fence and scrolled arch-shape parapet entablature. The house is double-fronted, possessing an asymmetrically placed column under the long-span bressumer, presumably one of two originally there. Ornament includes paired brackets at the verandah side walls and the- iron is of an early pattern.

Integrity - Generally original except for parapet urns/orbs.

Streetscape - Isolated building.

Significance - Architecturally, an early and large example of a common type, with some unusual details (compare 175 Hotham Street, East Melbourne for combined columns and iron) of local importance. Historically, owned and occupied for a long period by its developer - now the last one of the row: of local interest.

Recommendations -

Repaint in original or typical colours;

- replace parapet urns/orbs;
- consider zoning provisions to preserve original use and form;
- consider replacement of missing column.

Builder
 First Owner
 Both built by 1878, these offices were formerly row houses, part of Roden Terrace. Andrew Hulme, a tailor of Elizabeth Street, later Little Collins Street, owned and lived in 152 Roden Street from its construction. 148 Roden Street was built for John Stokes who lived there until after 1890 when he leased it to Robert Strothers. Builder, John James (qv), constructed both houses; 152 being for fellow builder, Alex Cooper (qv), who must have resold to Hulme.

Integrity Good Condition Fair
 Original Building Type
 History Not Assessed
 Description/Notable Features
 Two separate, two-storey stuccoed brick houses with two-level cast-iron verandahs, iron pickets and transverse-gable slated roofs. Notable features include the fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance
 Architecturally, two unusually sited (on either side of a lane) houses, of a distinguishably early, gabled form which are near original and are part of a streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, built and designed by the prolific local builder, John Jones (Refer 74-8 Hawke Street) for owner-occupiers, an unusual circumstance among the proliferation of speculative building: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations
 Rebuild fence of 152 to match 148; repaint in original or typical colours; consider re-zoning (as part of 148-56) as Special Residential 2 or similar, to preserve their residential use and form. Bricks painted, side (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

Other Comments
 Integrity - Iron fence gone from 152.
 Streetscape - Commencement of an isolated, but homogenous residential group 148-56 Roden Street.

 Streetscape - Commencement of an isolated, but homogenous residential group 148-56 Roden Street.

Significance
 Architecturally, two unusually sited (on either side of a lane) houses, of a distinguishably early, gabled form which are near original and are part of a streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, built and designed by the prolific local builder, John Jones (Refer 74-8 Hawke Street) for owner-occupiers, an unusual circumstance among the proliferation of speculative building: of local importance.

Recommendations
 Rebuild fence of 152 to match 148; repaint in original or typical colours; consider re-zoning (as part of 148-56) as Special Residential 2 or similar, to preserve their residential use and form.

Architect Henry Shalless and builder, Walter Webster of Carlton carried out the work, having combined also for Hadden, on two row houses in Hawke Street during 1878-9.

A pair of richly decorated, stuccoed brick and parapeted row houses, with two-level cast-iron verandahs and iron picket fences, built between large stuccoed corniced piers, each appointed with a pineapple. The entablatures are arched and 'supported' with duplex colonettes, between piers adorned with orbs. Pronounced architraves and colonettes are also used on the ground level. Notable features include the fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure; elaborate/high standard design of cement rendered surface.

Statement of Significance

Personal communication from family history research on Hulse.

Thomas Hulse was living in Spencer Street when he married in 1860. Thomas and his brother Allan are very prominent as 'Pioneer Engine drivers' on the Melbourne - Bendigo railway at the very beginning of the lines opening, initially when it was built only as far as Sunbury. He retired as Senior Loco Foreman at the huge 'new' (in 1895) Loco Sheds at North Melbourne, those sheds were unfortunately all demolished in 1963. I have a lot of data about these brothers and all their families. Thomas never had any family, that I am aware of, although married. After retirement in 1895, he was retained as a Railway engineering consultant until 1900 at least, then he must have moved to South Yarra, where he died in 1915 - aged 81. I have a number of stories about him, and have visited the grave of his parents in Cheshire just 12 months ago, I wrote up some material about the Hulse Railway families for the Local History Group in Cheshire where he hailed from. What can you tell me, about the house, or otherwise? I only have one photo that he is identified in, but I expect there are others of him 'on his engine' the only problem is we are unsure exactly which 'Loco was his!' Engines in those days were allocated to particular crews - we know what type, but not which one!

City of Melbourne Heritage Review (1999) for Hawke & Roden Street buildings

History

The building at 135-141 Hawke Street was constructed c.1889. It first appears in the Sands & McDougall directory in 1890, when it was occupied by Drysdale, Briscoe and Co., 'store'. The company later referred to as Briscoe and Co. Ltd, and the premises an iron yard. The company continued to occupy the building into the 1940s. By the 1970s, the building was occupied by Universal Pipelines

Pty Ltd.

Description

The building at 135-141 Hawke Street is a double-storey rendered masonry Victorian industrial building with a corrugated galvanised steel transverse gabled and sawtooth roof which is concealed behind a parapet. The building has two street frontages, to Hawke Street and 160 Roden Street. Both facades are similar, and each is dominated by a large semi-circular arched entrance, and has three wide but shallow piers which stop short of a moulded string course which is the sole decoration. There are six non-original windows over two levels on the Hawke Street elevation.

Significance

The former Drysdale, Briscoe and Co. building at 135-141 Hawke Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. Historically, the building is representative of late-nineteenth century industrial development in West Melbourne. Aesthetically, the building is a reasonably intact industrial building which is characterised by its austere facades to Hawke and Roden Streets, both of which incorporate impressive arched openings.

Grading Review

Upgraded from E to D. Although the building has been altered by the painting of brickwork and the insertion of non-original window openings, its overall form and facade composition remain intact. The building is an important element in both the Hawke and Roden Street streetscapes. Original datasheet: 135-141 Hawke Street, West Melbourne; 160 Roden Street, West Melbourne.

Briscoe had been established in England for over 100 years (as William Briscoe & Son) when they leased this warehouse, having opened in this colony at Elizabeth Street during 1853. By the late 1880s they had branches in New Zealand and New South Wales. Architect, Edward Twentyman, had designed the Queen Street premises; in

BRISCOE AND CO.'S NEW WAREHOUSE.

Within recent years several important additions have been made to the architecture of Melbourne, but there have been few such conspicuous examples of improvement as the new establishment erected for Messrs Briscoe and Co., wholesale ironmongers, in Little Collins-street west. This firm has for years held a foremost position in the trade in Australia, and their retail business centre in Collins-street east, which has just been closed, was one of the finest shops in the city. A change of policy, however, has taken place. The retail connexion has been to a considerable extent relinquished and the firm's operations are to be devoted almost entirely to wholesale trading. To enable them the better to develop this scheme they removed a few weeks ago to the new quarters, which have been built with a thorough regard to their requirements. The freehold is owned by Mr. George Robertson, who has also erected the building, and the value of the entire property is not less than £26,000. Messrs. Briscoe and Co. Arranged that the work should be in their hands, and according to their instructions the plans were prepared by Messrs. Twentyman and Askew, of Bourke-street west...

City of Melbourne Heritage Review 1999 for Hawke & Roden Street buildingsHistory

The building at 135-141 Hawke Street was constructed c.1889. It first appears in the Sands & McDougall directory in 1890, when it was occupied by Drysdale, Briscoe and Co., 'store'. The company later referred to as Briscoe and

SURVEYED PLACES

Co. Ltd, and the premises an iron yard. The company continued to occupy the building into the 1940s. By the 1970s, the building was occupied by Universal Pipelines Pty Ltd.

Description

The building at 135-141 Hawke Street is a double-storey rendered masonry Victorian industrial building with a corrugated galvanised steel transverse gabled and sawtooth roof which is concealed behind a parapet. The building has two street frontages, to Hawke Street and 160 Roden Street. Both facades are similar, and each is dominated by a large semi-circular arched entrance, and has three wide but shallow piers which stop short of a moulded string course which is the sole decoration. There are six non-original windows over two levels on the Hawke Street elevation.

Significance

The former Drysdale, Briscoe and Co. building at 135-141 Hawke Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. Historically, the building is representative of late-nineteenth century industrial development in West Melbourne. Aesthetically, the building is a reasonably intact industrial building which is characterised by its austere facades to Hawke and Roden Streets, both of which incorporate impressive arched openings.

Grading Review

Upgraded from E to D. Although the building has been altered by the painting of brickwork and the insertion of non-original window openings, its overall form and facade composition remain intact. The building is an important element in both the Hawke and Roden Street streetscapes. Original datasheet: 135-141 Hawke Street, West Melbourne; 160 Roden Street, West Melbourne.

`BRISCOE AND CO.'S NEW WAREHOUSE.

Within recent years several important additions have been made to the architecture of Melbourne, but there have been few such conspicuous examples of improvement as the new establishment erected for Messrs Briscoe and Co., wholesale ironmongers, in Little Collins-street west. This firm has for years held a foremost position in the trade in Australia, and their retail business centre in Collins-street east, which has just been closed, was one of the finest shops in the city. A change of policy, however, has taken place. The retail connexion has been to a considerable extent relinquished and the firm's operations are to be devoted almost entirely to wholesale trading. To enable them the better to develop this scheme they removed a few weeks ago to the new quarters, which have been built with a thorough regard to their requirements. The freehold is owned by Mr. George Robertson, who has also erected the building, and the value of the entire property is not less than £26,000. Messrs. Briscoe and Co. arranged that the work should be in their hands, and according to their instructions the plans were prepared by Messrs. Twentyman and Askew, of Bourke-street west...'

`BANK BUYS CITY

PROPERTY

The property known as Briscoe's Buildings, at 391-395 Little Collins street, near Queen street, has been purchased by the Bank of New South Wales from Briscoe and Company Limited, hardware merchants. The sale price has not been disclosed.

... adjoins the rear boundary of the bank's chief office in Melbourne at 368 Collins street. The purchase will give the bank a complete block with frontages to both Collins and Little Collins streets and will provide for extension of accommodation for the bank's business and for tenants. The bank has not yet considered plans for a building on the site. The brick building on the site was erected by Briscoe and Company Limited in 1904 and comprises four and a half stories and basement. With McNeil lane on the east side and Briscoe lane on the west the site has excellent natural light. The managing director of Briscoe and Co Ltd (Mr J P McNeil) said yesterday that possession of the property would be given to the bank in April next. Work was beginning immediately on the erection of a modern warehouse building on portion of the company's iron and steel yards at Roden Adderley and Hawke streets West Melbourne. The new building will be 140ft by 200ft and will contain more floor space than the building sold. The removal of the warehouse from the city had been contemplated for some time. Mr McNeil added. The architects for the new building are Messrs Purchas and Teague of Little Collins street.'

 Statement of Significance
 The former Drysdale, Briscoe and Co. building at 135-141 Hawke Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. Historically, the building is representative of late-nineteenth century industrial development in West Melbourne. Aesthetically, the building is a reasonably intact industrial building which is characterised by its austere facades to Hawke and Roden Streets, both of which incorporate impressive arched openings.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. Although the building has been altered by the painting of brickwork and the insertion of non-original window openings, its overall form and facade composition remain intact. The building is an important element in both the Hawke and Roden Street streetscapes. Original datasheet: 135-141 Hawke Street, West Melbourne; 160 Roden Street, West Melbourne.

 Victorian industrial building with a corrugated galvanised

Description/Notable Features

A parapeted stuccoed brick house with a transverse gabled roof, clad with iron, visible behind. Of a relatively uncommon form generally, but typical of its construction date, this house has a one-level cast-iron decorated verandah and iron picket fence. Quoining decorates the sides of fenestration which is divided about a rainwater head and downpipe which commences at a string-mould, below the dentilated cornice. Notable features include the fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an example of a relatively uncommon form which typifies early house construction; it possesses some unusual details and contributes to a limited streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, another of the owner-builders so common in the area: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint in typical or original colours; consider zoning provisions to maintain residential use and form. Colours (sympathetic) verandah concreted (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) downpipe (inappropriate - reinstate sympathetic alternative)

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally original, although the chimney appears altered. Streetscape - Contributing part of a residential streetscape, 197-203 Roden Street.

`WJ Grassick: An unqualified success

by Reeves, Simon

Abstract: Before the passing of the Architects Registration Act 1922, anybody in Victoria could refer to themselves as an architect. When registration became compulsory in 1923, countless people engaged in various aspects of the construction industry clamored for official recognition as architects. Amongst this hopeful throng was one W J Grassick, a 37-year old Irishman whose application stated boldly that, "for the past ten years, I have designed for architects, engineers and proprietors in Victoria, building construction of factories, warehouses, offices and power houses representing an average of about 250,000 pounds worth of work per annum". While his nomination was supported by Alec Eggleston and Harry Tompkins - two leading architects of the day - Grassick's application was rejected by the board, which noted ruefully that "you do not possess the necessary qualifications". This curt dismissal, however, belied the broad experience that Grassick had built up over the previous decade, and gave no hint of the even grander projects that would follow. ...

MODERN CORSET MAKING.

Now that frocks and coats are being more closely-fitted to the figure the importance of correctly-fitting foundation garments can scarcely be over- estimated Such renowned makes of corsets, brassieres, and other garments, as are purchased under the names of Liberty, Avio, Warner's, Redfern, and Kestos are produced in the Melbourne factory of Messrs R and W H. Symington & Co (Aust) Pty, Ltd , where the most up-to-date of machinery and equipment makes for the efficiency of the productions Spacious and airy rooms on a large block of land in West Melbourne command a grateful view of green lees from the lofty windows Within the white-overalled girls at- tend the electric sewing machines, the electric irons, the cutting machines, and the eyelet equipping devices. For recreation and rest the employees are provided with a tennis court on the roof, a recreation and luncheon hall, In which tea is provided, and a "hospital" in which works is may receive attention if the need arises In addition to the usual time allowed for lunch, the girl employees are allowed an interval for morning tea, and as there is no work done on Saturdays, the employees have plenty of time for the many self-imposed home tasks which most girls like to perform, as well as for outings at the week-end. In addition to the brands of foundation garments mentioned, Symington and Co manufacture exclusively various brands on behalf of the leading ... and retail stores throughout Australia.'

A MODERN FACTORY.

An inspection of the recently enlarged factory of R. and W. H. Symington and Co.. (Aust.) Pty., Ltd., brings true appreciation of the rapid progress made by modern industry. The congenial conditions under which the employees work contrast greatly with the lot of industrial workers a few years ago. The large, airy rooms, some occupying the entire space of one floor, are naturally lit, and an atmosphere of cleanliness is enhanced by the white overalls of the girls. Not one of the hundreds of employees engaged in the manufacture of corsets- and allied garments at this factory, it is stated, has been dismissed. Everything that, is possible to increase the comfort of the employees has been done. A tennis court is at their disposal on the roof, and a recreation room and a lunch hall are well patronised. In addition, there is a miniature hospital where employees may receive attention. The week's work ends on Friday afternoon, and no work is done on Saturdays. 'The renewed enthusiasm and energy with which the girls return to work each Monday,' the management says, 'is their practical way of saying 'Thank you.' 'The work rooms are well equipped with modern and easily managed machinery. Symington's, which, it is stated, is the largest manufacturing firm of its kind in Australia, is the Australian branch of the English firm of the same name, which was established nearly a century ago. The factory is at West Melbourne and many different types of corsetry are manufactured. In addition, the firm manufactures exclusively many brands on behalf of leading wholesale and retail stores throughout Australia.

SURVEYED PLACES

Pty. Ltd., makers of the world famous Liberty foundation garments, and Nu-Back corselettes...to feature a special Liberty week during the first week of June, and our fashion-conscious feminine population- will be delighted at the extensive range of corsetry available in all sizes and prices. Recently we had an opportunity of chatting with a member of this well known firm who had a very interesting and enlightening story to tell concerning the background of this enterprising organisation which is so well known all over the world. Symington's have six large factories in England, also they have a factory in Dundalk, Eire, two factories in New Zealand and two in Australia, one in West Melbourne which was opened in 1921, and another, established in 1943' at St. Arnaud. Liberty garments were first manufactured in England at Market Harborough in 1856, and since that time have succeeded in maintaining an enviable position in the world of corsetry. In Australia, at West Melbourne, where the Liberty factory occupies an extensive block of land from Howard street to Chetwynd street, all Liberty foundation garments are designed specially to suit the Australian figure requirements, Liberty offers a garment to suit every figure type, and this is achieved mainly because of a very special method of scientific designing, very interesting to the average person who hitherto had not realised what a scientific business corsetry really is. While there is a style and a price to suit every woman, in no instance is quality of materials and workmanship sacrificed for price. All the materials used in Liberty garments are the finest obtainable and are fully guaranteed. Symington's are the manufacturers also of the famous Nu-Back corselettes.etc.'

'Jenyns Corsets (1898-1990s).

Established by husband and wife Ebenezer Randolph Jenyns (1865-1958) and Sarah Ann Jenyns (1865-1952), in Brisbane in 1898. Jenyns was a family run business, but was run by a family with serious divisions.

What: Jenyns was a leading corset label that pioneered 'surgical' and 'hygienic' corsets for women. The business eventually became one of the country's most significant underwear empires, and one of Queensland's longest running fashion companies.

When: The business was established in the late nineteenth century, and survived in to the last decade of the 20th century. After more than fifty years as a successful enterprise, the company was sold to global brand, Triumph, in the late 1960s, which continued to use the Jenyns name, trading as The House of Jenyns. Triumph sold Jenyns in 1992, when it was split into a medical products company, Jenyns Pty Ltd., owned by Jenyns family members Ken, Pat and Julie Jenyns, and a specialised surgical corset business, Jenyns Bryant Surgical Corsetry Pty Ltd. These continued operating in to the 1990s.

Where: Jenyns corsets were stocked throughout the country in department stores and draperies, shown at exhibitions and fairs nationally, licensed through international retailers, and sold from their own premises. The company had locations in George Street (321 and later 309-315), Brisbane, for several decades, later moving to Melbourne Street, South Brisbane. After Triumph purchased the company in the late 1960s, the then named 'House of Jenyns' operated in Ipswich, until at least the late 1980s, when its once exceptionally popular corsets became a more or less obsolete product for most women. Why: Few Queensland fashion companies have had the rich history and longevity of Jenyns. While initially starting as a partnership between husband and wife Ebenezer and Sarah, it was Sarah who developed Jenyns into a leading corset company that endured for close to a century. Sarah was a passionate advocate for modernising corset designs, and developed side lacing and fan lacing corsets that enabled a wearer to easily get in and out of the garment without assistance (as was the case with older corset designs). She also believed that these garments had great medical benefits; relieving back problems, improving the figure, and supporting posture. Her patented designs were endorsed by the London Institute of Hygiene, a significant tick of approval for the company that 'legitimised' their health claims. An advertisement from 1920 states: "Jenyns supporting and reducing corsets are a health corset of distinctive merit. They are designed to combine the best principles of an abdominal belt with the finest artistry in corset making. The result is a corset unique in its supporting features and modern fashionable lines." By 1911 Sarah Jenyns was running her corset business independently, and continued to be associated with the success and legacy of Jenyns. Ebenezer continued to create surgical corsets as well, though with less success. In a short-lived moment of stability, they formed Jenyns Patent Corset Pty Co. in 1915.

In the 1920s the family business completely split, with Ebenezer and his son John applying for their own patents, and trading as Jenyns Truss & Patent Pty Co. However, this venture did not fair well. By contrast, Sarah's enterprise continued to grow. She brought her son Herbert in to the company, and he worked alongside her for more than twenty years. She secured Jenyns Patent Corset Co. Pty Ltd and continued to expand and patent new designs and improvements. Herbert was manager of Jenyns Patent Corsets by 1928, and instigated the manufacture of foundation garments and underclothing. Herbert became managing director of Jenyns in 1946. His own sons continued in the business in to the late 20th century. The business grew from 15 employees in 1920 to 500 in 1964. During World War II, Jenyns received large contracts from the army and navy to supply garments, and this was a time of rapid expansion for the business. Jenyns did have competition from local and international companies. In Australia their main rival was Berlei, and internationally firms such as Camp and Symington also served a similar market.

Herbert Jenyns led the company once Sarah became too elderly. Her own health failed her and she became senile. In 1951 more familial tension surfaced when it was alleged in the Supreme Court that Herbert had 'unduly influenced his mother to transfer 13,655 shares in the company to him.' Sarah passed away in 1952, and in 1953 the court's decision was reversed in Herbert's favour. He continued to run the business, becoming a millionaire. Jenyns corsets continued to be a fixture of women's wardrobes in to the 1960s, with many women still wearing them until the business was sold in 1992. Today Jenyns corsets are still coveted by collectors.

DEATH OF AN OLD RESIDENT.

A resident of North Melbourne of 37 years standing, passed away very suddenly on Saturday, in Mr Henry Shalless, Architect, of Leveson street. The deceased gentleman sat down to tea on Saturday evening, apparently in good health, but about 10 o'clock was found on the floor of the front room rolling about as if in great pain. He said he thought it was nothing serious, but on Dr Workman being called in, he expressed an opinion that an artery in the region of the heart had been ruptured. Mr Shalless lingered till between 11 and 12 o'clock, when he expired. The deceased gentleman was 68 years of age at the time of his death, and was quiet and unobtrusive in his demeanour, but owing to his gentlemanly consideration towards others and probity in business, was universally respected. Mr Shalless took no part in public affairs, but his friendship was much valued by those who knew him best, and he will be greatly missed by the members of his immediate circle of acquaintances. The funeral took place at 2.30. p.m. on Monday, the Rev. W. C. Bunning officiating, the burial service of the Order of Oddfellows, of which deceased was a member, being also read at the grave. Mr Shalless was interred in the Melbourne General Cemetery.'

 (Royal Commission evidence given by George Moore on the Narracan Railway and his cola mine supplying same Taken at Moe.)
 Dr. George :Moore, examined. doctor of medicine.
 ...
 Where do you reside ?
 -At St. Kilda and Moe, Gippsland.
 What experience, have you of coalmining ?
 -I have been connected with coal mining since 1882.
 4333. In this district ?-Yes.
 4334. Where and how ?

-In the Narracan Valley, about four miles from Moe.
 4335. A seam of coal was discovered there ?
 -Yes, some year or two before that by a Mr. Milia.
 A company was formed there by Mr. Mills and his friends, but, in the course of time, that company succumbed, and some time after that I purchased a portion of the land that belonged to this company, knowing that there was coal on the place, there being an outcrop into this land. I made arrangements with my neighbours, :Mr. Stephenson, for instance, and Mr. Lithgow, through whose land the coal ran, by which we were to put our joint properties into one, and they gave me an agreement, and a long time to float a company. I succeeded in floating a company in the time, called the Moe Coal Mining Company.
 43:36. That was how it was formed ?
 -Yes. An outcrop in Mr. Stephenson's ground was discovered in a gully by a man cutting scrub; the coal was visible.
 4337. Is that outcrop near the mouth of the tunnel of the present mine?
 -Half-a-mile this side.
 4338. North-west?-Yes.
 4339. Up the hill ?-Towards Mr. Stephenson's house. The outcrop was visible there. Before I had the company floated I employed miners at my own expense, and I fully equipped them, and put them in that gully, and drove in a tunnel, and laid bare 3 feet of the outcrop, and on that 3 feet the company was floated...
 4358. Do you think the fact of there being coal there had any thing to do with the construction of the Narracan Valley railway line ?
 -I think it had a good deal to do with it., and if it had not been for the mine there never would have been a railway there..
 4359. Do you know as a matter of fact that the Railway Commissioners seeing the coal there recommended the construction of the line ?
 -I believe they did so.
 4360. Do you know as a matter of fact that the railway Commissioners were requested to visit the Moe mine with a view of satisfying themselves as to the existence of coal there in order that they might be able to inform the :Minister as to the need of that line ?
 -That is perfectly correct .. I know they were asked to visit with that object. We had made a definite offer to supply them at a certain sum, and they were then requested to visit the mine and give their opinion, and I have every reason to believe that after that visit the railway was passed. ...etc.'

`SUICIDE AT HOTHAM.

Mr Candler held an inquest at Hotham yesterday on the body of Alice Worthington, aged 42 years, who was found hanging dead in her residence there on the 12th inst. The deceased was the wife of a stonemason, and lived near the swamp...

`George Moore, legally qualified medical practitioner, said he was called to see the deceased on Wednesday evening, and found her quite dead She had been dead for about an hour 'there was a distinct mark of a cord around the neck, but no other marks of violence In his opinion, death had been caused by strangulation From the evidence, he considered that the deceased had been of unsound mind Some years ago, when he attended her, she was suffering from puerperal mania, which frequently left permanent effects on the brain The jury returned a verdict that the deceased hanged herself whilst of unsound mind. '

`The sub-committee appointed by the Society to consider the complaint of Dr. Workman, beg to submit the following report: " " Dr. Workman was public vaccinator for West Melbourne. A case of small pox appeared in one of his club patients named Mrs. Henthorne; he reported the case at once to Dr. Shields, the Inspector of the Central Board of Health, and saw the case with Dr. Shields. At the request of the latter, he agreed to vaccinate the other members of the family; finding, however, that they resided outside the district of West Melbourne, he communicated immediately with the Local Health Officer; and, under his advice, instructed Mr. Henthorne to see Dr. Moore, the proper vaccinator of the district, without delay. Henthorne readily consented, and Dr. Workman's connection with the case then ceased.

" It appears that Henthorne did not visit Dr. Moore; and when Dr. Moore called upon him, he refused to be vaccinated. Subsequently he also developed small-pox. "In consequence of this miscarriage. Dr. Workman was requested to resign his office as Public Vaccinator; and when he sought to learn the reason for this request, he was informed by the President of the Central Board of Health, that it was for no failure in duty as a Public Vaccinator, but because, as a medical practitioner, he had not fulfilled his promise to vaccinate certain of his private, patients. "Dr. Workman refused to resign, alleging that he had placed the vaccination in the hands of the proper local authority, and had thereby virtually fulfilled his promise.

Thereupon he was dismissed from his office by the Governor in Council. "In the opinion of the sub-committee, the dismissal of Dr. Workman was arbitrary and unjust, and little calculated to promote cordial

i*elations between the Government and the profession. "The sub-committee further recommend that the facts of the case as now set forth be entered in the minutes of the Society." Dr. Workman thanked the sub-committee for the trouble they had taken in the matter, but as it was apparent that no action could be taken with the likelihood of redress being obtained, he was content that the matter should be allowed to rest.'

What is significant?

These row houses were built in 1868 for Dr. George Moore, a Queensberry Street surgeon and district public vaccinator. Dr Moore was also an investor in Moe coal mines and was involved with the creation of the Narracan Railway in that district during the 1880s as a potential coal supplier.

Moore leased the cottages to a great range of people including John Piggott, Ephraim Hill, Johanna Cantwell, Charles Templeton and Hugh James. The row was built by Thomas Noble, a local builder(qv) of Capel Street. Another similar cottage row (5) was built for Dr Moore at 62-68 Rosslyn Street, the two rows meeting at the former Sowter's shop & residence at the corner (70-74 Rosslyn Street) also built for Moore. The combination of house rows, with the hillside setting and adjacent parkland square of Eades Place, provides for a distinctive Victorian-era townscape.

Contributory elements include:

- A single-storey, brick row of five cottages in Chetwynd Street and four in Rosslyn Street, all finished in ruled stucco and set on bluestone footings (typically painted over) with end and rear walls face brick (see 68 Rosslyn St rendered over in Chetwynd St);
- corner former shop, set on a hemi-hexagonal in plan at the corner of Chetwynd Street and Rosslyn Street,
- transverse gabled, typically corrugated iron clad, roofs (new tiles on 70-4 Rosslyn);
- cemented chimneys (some cornice details missing) engaged alternately in expressed party walls that are corbelled back to the wall line on the street facade;
- doors typically placed in pairs, except for 12 Chetwynd St where the door is central and 70-74 Rosslyn St where it is set in the splayed corner;

- doors were typically 4 panel with two-light toplights (16 Chetwynd St door now Edwardian-era, 70-74 Rosslyn St changed);
- single double-hung sash windows to houses, except for 12 Chetwynd St which has two;
- three long narrow windows to the former shop at 70-74 Rosslyn St which may be added;
- all built on the street alignment with stone paved lane access to the rear, the small scale and siting being indicative of the age.

The rows form strong streetscape elements, being set hard on the street on both sides of a distinctive triangular site. Trees in Eades Place and Chetwynd Street assist the small and intimate scale of these houses by confinement of the field of vision to them, whilst the former shop obtains maximum prominence.

How is it significant?

Dr Moore's row houses and shop are significant historically and aesthetically to West Melbourne and the City of Melbourne.

Why is it significant?

Dr Moore's row houses and shop are significant:

Architecturally, the rows are of a simple early form with little architectural embellishment individually, but as continuous rows of stepped cottages they form strong streetscape elements, each closely matched to the streets irregular junction angle and the small confined village scale evokes the early Victorian-era well.

Historically, an extensive development by a local active medical practitioner and successful investor, Dr George Moore, who was cited in a number of well publicised medical events in the Victorian-era as well as providing expert evidence to the Royal Commission into the coal industry 1891.

Architecturally, the rows are of a simple early form with little architectural embellishment individually, but as continuous rows of stepped cottages they form strong streetscape elements, each closely matched to the streets irregular junction angle and the small confined village scale evokes the early Victorian-era well.

Historically, an extensive development by a local active medical practitioner and successful investor, Dr George Moore, who was cited in a number of well publicised medical events in the Victorian-era as well as providing expert evidence to the Royal Commission into the coal industry 1891.

Royal commission to inquire as to the best means of developing and promoting the coal industry of Victoria.
 1889-91
 1891, No 178, p101-(Royal Commission evidence given by George Moore on the Narracan Railway and his cola mine supplying same Taken at Moe.)
 Dr. George :Moore, examined. doctor of medicine.
 ...
 Where do you reside ?
 -At St. Kilda and Moe, Gippsland.
 What experience, have you of coalmining ?
 -I have been connected with coal mining since 1882.
 4333. In this district ?-Yes.
 4334. Where and how ?

-In the Narracan Valley, about four miles from Moe.
 4335. A seam of coal was discovered there ?
 -Yes, some year or two before that by a Mr. Milia.
 A company was formed there by Mr. Mills and his friends, but, in the course of time, that company succumbed, and some time after that I purchased a portion of the land that belonged to this company, knowing that there was coal on the place, there being an outcrop into this land. I made arrangements with my neighbours, :Mr. Stephenson, for instance, and Mr. Lithgow, through whose land the coal ran, by which we were to put our joint properties into one, and they gave me an agreement, and a long time to float a company. I succeeded in floating a company in the time, called the Moe Coal Mining Company.
 43:36. That was how it was formed ?
 -Yes. An outcrop in Mr. Stephenson's ground was discovered in a gully by a man cutting scrub; the coal was visible.
 4337. Is that outcrop near the mouth of the tunnel of the present mine?
 -Half-a-mile this side.
 4338. North-west?-Yes.
 4339. Up the hill ?-Towards Mr. Stephenson's house. The outcrop was visible there. Before I had the company floated I employed miners at my own expense, and I fully equipped them, and put them in that gully, and drove in a tunnel, and laid bare 3 feet of the outcrop, and on that 3 feet the company was floated...
 4358. Do you think the fact of there being coal there had any thing to do with the construction of the Narracan Valley railway line ?
 -I think it had a good deal to do with it., and if it had not been for the mine there never would have been a railway
 there.
 4359. Do you know as a matter of fact that the Railway Commissioners seeing the coal there recommended the construction of the line ?
 -I believe they did so.
 4360. Do you know as a matter of fact that the railway Commissioners were requested to visit the Moe mine with a view of satisfying themselves as to the existence of coal there in order that they might be able to inform the :Minister as to the need of that line ?
 -That is perfectly correct .. I know they were asked to visit with that object. We had made a definite offer to supply them at a certain sum, and they were then requested to visit the mine and give their opinion, and I have every reason to believe that after that visit the railway was passed. ...etc.'

Mr Candler held an inquest at Hotham yesterday on the body of Alice Worthington, aged 42 years, who was found hanging dead in her residence there on the 12th inst. The deceased was the wife of a stonemason, and lived near the swamp...

`George Moore, legally qualified medical practitioner, said he was called to see the deceased on Wednesday evening, and found her quite dead She had been dead for about an hour 'there was a distinct mark of a cord around the neck, but no other marks of violence In his opinion, death had been caused by strangulation From the evidence, he considered that the deceased had been of unsound mind Some years ago, when he attended her, she was suffering from puerperal mania, which frequently left permanent effects on the brain The jury returned a verdict that the deceased hanged herself whilst of unsound mind. '

`The sub-committee appointed by the Society to consider the complaint of Dr. Workman, beg to submit the following report: " " Dr. Workman was public vaccinator for West Melbourne. A case of small pox appeared in one of his club patients named Mrs. Henthorne; he reported the case at once to Dr. Shields, the Inspector of the Central Board of Health, and saw the case with Dr. Shields. At the request of the latter, he agreed to vaccinate the other members of the family; finding, however, that they resided outside the district of West Melbourne, he communicated immediately with the Local Health Officer; and, under his advice, instructed Mr. Henthorne to see Dr. Moore, the proper vaccinator of the district, without delay. Henthorne readily consented, and Dr. Workman's connection with the case then ceased.

" It appears that Henthorne did not visit Dr. Moore; and when Dr. Moore called upon him, he refused to be vaccinated. Subsequently he also developed small-pox. "In consequence of this miscarriage. Dr. Workman was requested to resign his office as Public Vaccinator; and when he sought to learn the reason for this request, he was informed by the President of the Central Board of Health, that it was for no failure in duty as a Public Vaccinator, but because, as a medical practitioner, he had not fulfilled his promise to vaccinate certain of his private, patients. "Dr. Workman refused to resign, alleging that he had placed the vaccination in the hands of the proper local authority, and had thereby virtually fulfilled his promise.

Thereupon he was dismissed from his office by the Governor in Council. "In the opinion of the sub-committee, the dismissal of Dr. Workman was arbitrary and unjust, and little calculated to promote cordial

i*elations between the Government and the profession. "The sub-committee further recommend that the facts of the case as now set forth be entered in the minutes of the Society." Dr. Workman thanked the sub-committee for the trouble they had taken in the matter, but as it was apparent that no action could be taken with the likelihood of redress being obtained, he was content that the matter should be allowed to rest.'

What is significant?

These row houses were built in 1868 for Dr. George Moore, a Queensberry Street surgeon and district public vaccinator. Dr Moore was also an investor in Moe coal mines and was involved with the creation of the Narracan Railway in that district during the 1880s as a potential coal supplier.

Moore leased the cottages to a great range of people including John Piggott, Ephraim Hill, Johanna Cantwell, Charles Templeton and Hugh James. The row was built by Thomas Noble, a local builder(qv) of Capel Street. Another similar cottage row (5) was built for Dr Moore at 62-68 Rosslyn Street, the two rows meeting at the former Sowter's shop & residence at the corner (70-74 Rosslyn Street) also built for Moore. The combination of house rows, with the hillside setting and adjacent parkland square of Eades Place, provides for a distinctive Victorian-era townscape.

Contributory elements include:

- A single-storey, brick row of five cottages in Chetwynd Street and four in Rosslyn Street, all finished in ruled stucco and set on bluestone footings (typically painted over) with end and rear walls face brick (see 68 Rosslyn St rendered over in Chetwynd St);
- corner former shop, set on a hemi-hexagonal in plan at the corner of Chetwynd Street and Rosslyn Street,
- transverse gabled, typically corrugated iron clad, roofs (new tiles on 70-4 Rosslyn);
- cemented chimneys (some cornice details missing) engaged alternately in expressed party walls that are corbelled back to the wall line on the street facade;
- doors typically placed in pairs, except for 12 Chetwynd St where the door is central and 70-74 Rosslyn St where it is set in the splayed corner;

- doors were typically 4 panel with two-light toplights (16 Chetwynd St door now Edwardian-era, 70-74 Rosslyn St changed);
- single double-hung sash windows to houses, except for 12 Chetwynd St which has two;
- three long narrow windows to the former shop at 70-74 Rosslyn St which may be added;
- all built on the street alignment with stone paved lane access to the rear, the small scale and siting being indicative of the age.

The rows form strong streetscape elements, being set hard on the street on both sides of a distinctive triangular site. Trees in Eades Place and Chetwynd Street assist the small and intimate scale of these houses by confinement of the field of vision to them, whilst the former shop obtains maximum prominence.

How is it significant?

Dr Moore's row houses and shop are significant historically and aesthetically to West Melbourne and the City of Melbourne.

Why is it significant?

Dr Moore's row houses and shop are significant:

Architecturally, the rows are of a simple early form with little architectural embellishment individually, but as continuous rows of stepped cottages they form strong streetscape elements, each closely matched to the streets irregular junction angle and the small confined village scale evokes the early Victorian-era well.

At the request of the latter, he agreed to vaccinate the other members of the family; finding, however, that they resided outside the district of West Melbourne, he communicated immediately with the Local Health Officer; and, under his advice, instructed Mr. Henthorne to see Dr. Moore, the proper vaccinator of the district, without delay. Henthorne readily consented, and Dr. Workman's connection with the case then ceased.

" It appears that Henthorne did not visit Dr. Moore; and when Dr. Moore called upon him, he refused to be vaccinated. Subsequently he also developed small-pox. "In consequence of this miscarriage. Dr. Workman was requested to resign his office as Public Vaccinator; and when he sought to learn the reason for this request, he was informed by the President of the Central Board of Health, that it was for no failure in duty as a Public Vaccinator, but because, as a medical practitioner, he had not fulfilled his promise to vaccinate certain of his private, patients. "Dr. Workman refused to resign, alleging that he had placed the vaccination in the hands of the proper local authority, and had thereby virtually fulfilled his promise.

Thereupon he was dismissed from his office by the Governor in Council. "In the opinion of the sub-committee, the dismissal of Dr. Workman was arbitrary and unjust, and little calculated to promote cordial i*relations between the Government and the profession. "The sub-committee further recommend that the facts of the case as now set forth be entered in the minutes of the Society." Dr. Workman thanked the sub-committee for the trouble they had taken in the matter, but as it was apparent that no action could be taken with the likelihood of redress being obtained, he was content that the matter should be allowed to rest.'

What is significant?

These row houses were built in 1868 for Dr. George Moore, a Queensberry Street surgeon and district public vaccinator. Dr Moore was also an investor in Moe coal mines and was involved with the creation of the Narracan Railway in that district during the 1880s as a potential coal supplier.

Moore leased the cottages to a great range of people including John Piggott, Ephraim Hill, Johanna Cantwell, Charles Templeton and Hugh James. The row was built by Thomas Noble, a local builder(qv) of Capel Street. Another similar cottage row (5) was built for Dr Moore at 62-68 Rosslyn Street, the two rows meeting at the former Sowter's shop & residence at the corner (70-74 Rosslyn Street) also built for Moore. The combination of house rows, with the hillside setting and adjacent parkland square of Eades Place, provides for a distinctive Victorian-era townscape.

Contributory elements include:

- A single-storey, brick row of five cottages in Chetwynd Street and four in Rosslyn Street, all finished in ruled stucco and set on bluestone footings (typically painted over) with end and rear walls face brick (see 68 Rosslyn St rendered over in Chetwynd St);
- corner former shop, set on a hemi-hexagonal in plan at the corner of Chetwynd Street and Rosslyn Street,
- transverse gabled, typically corrugated iron clad, roofs (new tiles on 70-4 Rosslyn);
- cemented chimneys (some cornice details missing) engaged alternately in expressed party walls that are corbelled back to the wall line on the street facade;
- doors typically placed in pairs, except for 12 Chetwynd St where the door is central and 70-74 Rosslyn St where it is set in the splayed corner;
- doors were typically 4 panel with two-light toplights (16 Chetwynd St door now Edwardian-era, 70-74 Rosslyn St changed);

SURVEYED PLACES

- single double-hung sash windows to houses, except for 12 Chetwynd St which has two;
- three long narrow windows to the former shop at 70-74 Rosslyn St which may be added;
- all built on the street alignment with stone paved lane access to the rear, the small scale and siting being indicative of the age.

The rows form strong streetscape elements, being set hard on the street on both sides of a distinctive triangular site. Trees in Eades Place and Chetwynd Street assist the small and intimate scale of these houses by confinement of the field of vision to them, whilst the former shop obtains maximum prominence.

How is it significant?

Dr Moore's row houses and shop are significant historically and aesthetically to West Melbourne and the City of Melbourne.

Why is it significant?

Dr Moore's row houses and shop are significant:

Architecturally, the rows are of a simple early form with little architectural embellishment individually, but as continuous rows of stepped cottages they form strong streetscape elements, each closely matched to the streets irregular junction angle and the small confined village scale evokes the early Victorian-era well.

Historically, an extensive development by a local active medical practitioner and successful investor, Dr George Moore, who was cited in a number of well publicised medical events in the Victorian-era as well as providing expert evidence to the Royal Commission into the coal industry 1891.

1891, No 178, p101-

(Royal Commission evidence given by George Moore on
 Taken at Moe.)

Dr. George :Moore, examined. doctor of medicine.

Where do you reside ?

-At St. Kilda and Moe, Gippsland.

What experience, have you of coalmining ?

-I have been connected with coal mining since 1882.

4333. In this district ?-Yes.

4334. Where and how ?

-In the Narracan Valley, about four miles from Moe.

4335. A seam of coal was discovered there ?

-Yes, some year or two before that by a Mr. Milia.

A company was formed there by Mr. Mills and his friends, but, in the course of time, that company succumbed, and some time after that I purchased a portion of the land that belonged to this company, knowing that there was coal on the place, there being an outcrop into this land. I made arrangements with my neighbours, :Mr. Stephenson, for instance, and Mr. Lithgow, through whose land the coal ran, by which we were to put our joint properties into one, and they gave me an agreement, and a long time to float a company. I succeeded in floating a company in the time, called the Moe Coal Mining Company.

43:36. That was how it was formed ?

-Yes. An outcrop in Mr. Stephenson's ground was discovered in a gully by a man cutting scrub; the coal was visible.

4337. Is that outcrop near the mouth of the tunnel of the present mine?

4338. North-west?-Yes.

4339. Up the hill ?-Towards Mr. Stephenson's house. The outcrop was visible there. Before I had the company floated I employed miners at my own expense, and I fully equipped them, and put them in that gully, and drove in a tunnel, and laid bare 3 feet of the outcrop, and on that 3 feet the company was floated...

 any thing to do with the construction of the Narracan Valley railway line ?

-I think it had a good deal to do with it., and if it had not been for the mine there never would have been a railway
 there.

4359. Do you know as a matter of fact that the Railway
 Commissioners seeing the coal there recommended
 the construction of the line ?

-I believe they did so.

4360. Do you know as a matter of fact that the railway Commissioners were requested to visit the Moe mine with a view of satisfying themselves as to the existence of coal there in order that they might be able to inform the :Minister as to the need of that line ?

-That is perfectly correct .. I know they were asked to visit with that object. We had made a definite offer to supply them at a certain sum, and they were then requested to visit the mine and give their opinion, and I have every reason to believe that after that visit the railway was passed. ...etc.'

`George Moore, legally qualified medical practitioner, said he was called to see the deceased on Wednesday evening, and found her quite dead She had been dead for about an hour 'there was a distinct mark of a cord around the neck, but no other marks of violence In his opinion, death had been caused by strangulation From the evidence, he considered that the deceased had been of unsound mind Some years ago, when he attended her, she was suffering from puerperal mania, which frequently left permanent effects on the brain The jury returned a verdict that the deceased hanged herself whilst of unsound mind. `Felton Grimwade & Co was established in Melbourne in about 1867, soon after moving from Russell Street to Flinders Lane where its importing business flourished. The firm operated as wholesale druggists but developed into a large manufacturing enterprise with products including acids, salt, glass bottles, fertilisers and eucalyptus oil. In 1870 they were operating a chemical works at their Port Melbourne manufacturing site and as early as 1872 the Port Melbourne Council opposed the manufacture of sulphuric acid at its plant. Nevertheless, company activities from the outset were to include the manufacture of sulphuric acid and other mineral acids including bisulphide of iron. By 1894 the Ingles Street building was the principal manufactory at Felton Grimwade and CO's. Chemical works. The works was extensively damaged by fire in 1895, but was rebuilt and continued to operate into the mid twentieth century. 38 The complex was later occupied by Arthur Vale and Co. Pty. Ltd., oil stores, Cotton Dressing Pty. Ltd. and the United Oil Co. Pty. Ltd. oil store. 39 And more recently became part of AMI and then Toyota. 40 Alfred Felton is remembered for the generous bequest he gave to the National Gallery of Victoria, which continues to fund the purchase of artworks for the state collection.'

Description/Notable Features

The former Felton Grimwade and Duerdins Factory is a three-storey Moderne style factory constructed of red brick with a projecting four-storey corner bay and parapeted roof. Relatively austere, the cubic building is punctuated by a series of square and rectangular steel-framed windows with horizontal glazing bars.

Statement of Significance

The former Felton Grimwade and Duerdins Factory, at 133 Rossllyn Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical interest. Historically, the factory derives significance by its association with the prominent Grimwade family and Alfred Felton, prominent Melbourne philanthropist. Aesthetically, the building is a typical and relatively intact example of an inter-War factory, and a prominent element in the streetscape.

'Victoria & Its Metropolis' 1887-8

'Dixon , P. G., and Co., aerated waters and cordial manufacturers, Rosslyn-street, West Melbourne. This firm affords a striking illustration of the success which attends the manufacturer who studies the public benefit by maintaining his products at the highest standard of excellence. The business-now one of the most extensive in Australasia-was founded in 1851 by Mr. P. . G. Dixon, from whom the present proprietors, Mr. Matthew Lang and Mr. Alexander Scott, acquired it by purchase in 1883. Since that date magnificent premises have been erected, in which the finest machinery embodying the latest improvements is constantly at work.

A brief description of this superb factory may not be uninteresting to our readers. The Main Building has no less than six floors, access to which is gained by an elevator worked by hydraulic power. On the Sixth Floor are huge tanks, moored side by side, containing a supply of the purest Mount Macedon spring water. This water is brought constantly by special railway truck from the Mount to the Melbourne station, whence it is carted to the factory, and raised by steam-pump to its present high level. At some distance is a room specially built as a boiling-room, in which are several large steam-jacketed coppers, whose inner surfaces are coated with pure tin, in which syrups for aerated waters and cordials are prepared. (Here it may be remarked that block-tin pipes are a notable feature throughout the establishment.) Descending to the Fifth Floor, the attention is arrested by an enormous cylinder, which we are informed is the casing of the Gigantic Filters, through which even the limpid Macedon water must pass. The capacity of these filters is 6000 gallons per diem. Proceeding inward, we reach the Sugar Store, where many tons of the finest Dutch crushed loaf await conversion into delectable beverages. Here a huge refrigerator, which extends the whole length of the building, cools the syrup on its way front the coppers above to the Syrup Vats' Chamber on the Fourth Floor. As you enter, you notice that on either hand, resting on a leaden floor , range rows of large vats , whose stone - coloured sides, relieved by chocolate-hued hoops, present an exquisitely fresh and clean aspect. Of these vats there are no less than twenty-two, the capacity of each being 225 gallons. Down the centre of the room is a range of white enamelled tanks, from which the syrups are drawn off to the bottling racks below, there to be mixed in proper proportion with the water which has been aerated in the manner we shall shortly describe.

Descending to the Third Floor, the chilliness of the atmosphere is strikingly apparent. The reason is soon obvious . This is the Macedon water reservoir . Here, in massive slate tanks 8 ft. deep , the crystalline fluid awaits its destiny. (engraving of complex, show existing buildings).

There are eight 1000 -gallon tanks on one side of this " cool grot," and thirteen mineral-water tanks on the other. Descending to the Machine room below, the first impression is that one has by mistake got into the Royal Mint. This fancy owes its rise to the beauty of the elegant, yet powerful, machinery which noiselessly does its work in this spotlessly clean chamber. The massive pumps, resplendent with polished steel and gun-metal, which incorporate the carbonic acid gas, drawn from gasometers underneath, with the water from above, are as perfect in their action as it is possible to conceive. Two of these pumps are capable of producing 3500 dozen each per diem, and two of smaller size 1500 dozen each per diem. The total producing power of these pumps therefore is 10,000 dozen daily. To each pump is attached a condenser, in which the incorporation of gas and water is finally completed. Thence the highly charged fluid proceeds to the Bottling Room on the same floor. This spacious hall, 100 ft. by 64 ft., is fitted up with no less than fifteen racks of various descriptions. Particularly worthy of notice are the Automatic Steam Bottling Racks, which can bottle at a rate of speed far exceeding those operated by hand. The floor of this room is of asphalt, and tramways intersect it, on which trucks pass to and fro with full and empty bottles. Mention should here be made of the source of the gas with which the waters are charged. The gas is generated on the first floor in two of Hayward, Tyler and Co.'s largest oak generators, to which are attached two very large gasometers, fitted with purifiers of the most approved description. From these gasometers the splendid pumps above, also by Hayward, Tyler and Co., draw their supplies. The motive power is derived from a beautiful horizontal high-pressure engine of 10 horsepower nominal, fed by a steel-ended, double-rieveted boiler, capable of working up to 150 lbs. pressure. We now turn to the provision for storage, which is a most important feature, as first-class soda water can be made only in cold weather, when the thermometer is in the forties. The Soda water Cellars are models of capacity, cleanliness, and coolness. Roofed with concrete and floored with asphalt, they remind one of the rock-hewn " caves" of the Rhenish vineyards. No expense has been spared to reach the utmost attainable perfection in these cellars, whose contents promise much icy consolation to hot and thirsty denizens of the metropolis in the ardent summer days. The provision for the reception and storage and washing of bottles is most efficient. A form of bottle invented by a member of the firm, and brought to perfection by the South Melbourne glass works, bids fair to hold its own against any imported article of the class. The Liqueur Department is as complete as that for the production of aerated waters. From the refrigerator previously mentioned, the syrups pass to the compounding tuns, whence they descend to a large number of huge oval vats, to be thence drawn off for bulk or bottle. P. G. Dixon and Co. 'a liqueurs comprise curagoa, maraschino, ginger wine, ginger brandy, quinine wine, &c. The Delivery Department is adequate to every requirement. Here all day long the familiar green vans, blazoned with the name of the firm in golden letters, may be seen leaving with double decked loads of lemonade, soda water, ginger ale, tonic water, &c., and returning with empties, whose contents have fulfilled their natural destiny.

The whole establishment is alive with push and ability, its proprietors being determined to spare no pains or cost to maintain the high place to which the possession of over one hundred prize medals and awards, including first prize at the International Exhibition of 1881, proves them to have already attained.'

Felton Grimwade & Co was established in Melbourne in about 1867, soon after moving from Russell Street to Flinders Lane where its importing business flourished. The firm operated as wholesale druggists but developed into a large manufacturing enterprise with products including acids, salt, glass bottles, fertilisers and eucalyptus oil. In 1870 they were operating a chemical works at their Port Melbourne manufacturing site and as early as 1872 the Port Melbourne Council opposed the manufacture of sulphuric acid at its plant. Nevertheless, company activities from the outset were to include the manufacture of sulphuric acid and other mineral acids including bi-sulphide of iron. By 1894 the Ingles Street building was the principal manufactory at Felton Grimwade and CO's. Chemical works. The works was extensively damaged by fire in 1895, but was rebuilt and continued to operate into the mid twentieth century. 38 The complex was later occupied by Arthur Vale and Co. Pty. Ltd., oil stores, Cotton Dressing Pty. Ltd. and the United Oil Co. Pty. Ltd. oil store. 39 And more recently became part of AMI and then Toyota. 40 Alfred Felton is remembered for the generous bequest he gave to the National Gallery of Victoria, which continues to fund the purchase of artworks for the state collection.

Description/Notable Features

The houses at 120-124 Rosslyn Street are double-storey attached Victorian residences with double-storey verandahs and hipped corrugated galvanised steel roofs.

The houses are of rendered masonry and share similar details, although No. 124 is wider and has a segmented arched vehicular entrance and bluestone pitched drive.

The verandahs have simple timber slatted balustrading and terminated at wing walls embellished with consoles and pine cones. French doors open onto the verandah at the first floor level; ground floor windows are timber-framed double-hung sashes. Chimneys are brick with corbelled cappings. The cast iron palisade fences appear to be original or early. No. 120 has undergone the most severe alterations. A projecting double-storey wing dating from the inter-War period has been added, obscuring the original facade.

`OUR INDUSTRIES.

AUSTRALIAN BISCUIT CO. LIMITED.

On Thursday evening last the Australian Biscuit Company (late J. H. Walker and Son) opened their large and spacious factory in Jeffcott street (24 Jeffcott St -since redevelopment) , West Melbourne, by a social. The second floor was illuminated and decorated by colored lanterns and flowers, and each window all round the building was lighted up by a number of candles. The large floor of the building. which is four stories in height. was crowded by the workpeople and a number of invited guests, many of whom came from Port Melbourne. The proceedings opened with an entertainment in which Misses Vine, Haines, Harrison, Emblin and Rendall, and Messrs. Brooke, Francis, Rendall, Price, Stevens, Elder and Williams and Master Schraefer took part.....

During the evening Mr. P. M. Salmon proposed the health of the directors, coupled with the name of Mr. C. A. Walker, the managing director. Mr. Salmon, in the course of his remarks, referred to the narrowing of the gulf which once existed between capital and labor, and the action of Mr. Walker in giving each girl or boy a new dress and a suit of clothes, and 200 shares distributed among the senior hands of the firm. This did much to cement the good feeling which existed between employer and employees. Mr Walker had entered the firm as office boy, and had climbed to his present position by sheer hard work. Protection was their main-stay, and he would like to see the system, as often the employee amassed a fortune and the employees had the same wage no matter how skilful they had become. He was a man of energy and business aptitude, and he hoped to see him climb the ladder like Mr. Walker had done. Mr. Salmon was frequently applauded during his earnest and powerful address, and concluded amidst cheers and applause ...Mr. Rendall proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. C. A. Walker for his kind hospitality ' that evening. This was carried by three cheers, and one for his respected father. The meeting shortly after broke up, all being delighted with the entertainment and their entertainer.'

`The Argus': 15/6/1889

`AUSTRALIAN BISCUIT COMPANY.

The second half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of the above company was held at Scott's Hotel yesterday. Mr. W. W. Thomas occupied the chair, and there was an attendance of about 12 shareholders, The directors' report stated that a profit of £956 9s. had been made, and though it was not as great as they could have desired, this result was wholly attributable to the unsettled state of the working plant, the whole period having practically been spent in the pulling down, removing, and re-erecting plant and ovens from the old factory and the Exhibition. Under these circumstances, they had, in many instances, been obliged to refuse orders, but were now settled in the new factory, and in thorough working order. The month of May showed an increase in biscuits alone of 33 per cent, over the average output, thus showing that the business was fast securing a sound footing. As regarded the profit shown, it was sufficient to pay 10 per cent, on the called-up capital, with the exception of the shares allotted for goodwill to the vendors, and the directors felt assured of the future success of the undertaking. The report was received and adopted, on the motion of Mr. J. K. Joynt, seconded by Mr. H. G. Cook. Mr. J. K. Joynt was unanimously re-elected a director. A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

An extraordinary meeting was subsequently held, at which verbal alterations were made in the rules providing for a change of date in holding the half-yearly meetings and presenting the half-yearly statement.

Function and history...

The prison is also known by the nickname 'The Map'. Previously known as the Melbourne Remand Centre, the Melbourne Assessment Prison was originally built to accommodate Melbourne's remand prisoners and sits on the site of the former Western Hotel on the corner of Spencer Street and La Trobe Street just west of Melbourne's central business district.

The primary purpose of the facility is to provide statewide assessment and orientation services for all male prisoners received into the prison system.[1]

In 1997 the prison became the main reception prison for all male prisoners in Victoria. Initial planning for the prison commenced in 1974. Construction commenced in December 1983 and was completed in 1989 at a cost of A $80m. The prison was officially opened on 6 April 1989, and received its first prisoners on 29 May 1989.[1]

At least two prisoners have escaped from the Melbourne Assessment Prison. In one incident explosives smuggled into the unit were used to blow open the armoured plastic windows of a cell, while the two inmates hid behind mattresses (see Peter Gibb). Since then steel bars have been added to the windows to prevent a repetition.[citation needed]

The prison has seen a small expansion of its capacity over the years and now holds 305 prisoners as of mid 2014.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History - Sands and Kenny (.. 1857-61) and Sands and McDougall, (1862-c1974) were the publishers of the directory to commercial and general Melbourne, later, the Melbourne and suburban directory and the 'Directory of Victoria ' providing the longest issue of any other directory publisher in Victoria . They also published a directory of Canberra. 1
 From their first retailing outlet, the Victoria Stationery Warehouse in Collins Street West (No.46) and stores in Little Flinders Street, their expansion provided for the erection of this factory building to the design of Thomas Watts and Sons, by builder F. Lavers of Hawthorn. Products made there included cardboard and paper containers, those associated with book binding and general stationery and letterpress printing was combined with general publishing. 4
 Watts is also known for, commercial buildings, such as 'Robb's Building (1866) formerly in Collins Street; the early buildings of the Gordon Institute of Technology in Bowen Street, Melbourne; stores for the City Property Co. in Flinders Lane (1889); stores for Alston and Payne in McKillop Street (1888) and the similarly gigantic and brick Victoria Sugar Company Works, Beach Street, Port Melbourne.5

Description - A large six-storey, red brick and stucco factory building with basalt sills and parapeted roof line. Three facade bays are expressed by parapet pediments and some storeys divided by string-moulds, below the parapet cornice.

Reputedly riveted wrought-iron columns and beams are the internal structure with timber floors fire-proofed by the Traegerwellbeck arched corrugated plate linings, with incombustible infill (refer . Victoria Bond 565-71 Lonsdale Street, Melbourne - a five-storey store claimed as the first to use the all-wrought-iron frame combined with the Traegerwellbeck system, 1887). As befits its manufactory function, ornament derived from the Italian Renaissance is applied sparingly (refer later Laurens - Munster Terrace complex).

Streetscape - A corner site, original condition and gigantic proportions set amongst low-rise neighbours, determine that this is a period landmark.

Significance - Architecturally, like many other store/factory buildings of the period and earlier, this dominates its contemporaries in scale and like the Victoria Bond and Lonsdale Free Store, 541-51 Lonsdale Street (1890), adopts Classical ornament in the commercial oeuvre current since the 1850s . However, both of these examples are comparatively altered. Other examples include the former wool stores in Brougham Street Geelong and the former Robur Tea Building in Clarendon Street, South Melbourne . A later example is the former Victorian Sugar Company Works which is architecturally later and a larger more varied complex. This building is a large and original, prominently sited and competently ornamented 19th century factory building which possesses early use of all iron fire-proofed framing and was designed by the distinguished architectural firm, Thomas Watts and Sons. It is of State importance as an indicative and surprisingly original example of the fast disappearing large industrial buildings of the late 19th century. Historically, the earliest known surviving and most substantial building linked with this most well known of stationary firms: of State importance.

Recommendations- Prepare a conservation/restoration strategy for the building; restore and conserve.

History - Sands and Kenny (.. 1857-61) and Sands and McDougall, (1862-c1974)were the publishers of the directory to commercial and general Melbourne, later, the Melbourne and suburban directory and the 'Directory of Victoria ' providing the longest issue of any other directory publisher in Victoria . They also published a directory of Canberra. 1

From their first retailing outlet, the Victoria Stationery Warehouse in Collins Street West (No.46) and stores in Little Flinders Street, their expansion provided for the erection of this factory building to the design of Thomas Watts and Sons, by builder F. Lavers of Hawthorn. Product s made there included cardboard and paper containers, those associated with book binding and general stationery and letterpress printing was combined with general publishing. 4

Watts is also known for, commercial buildings, such as 'Robb's Building (1866) formerly in Collins Street; t he early buildings of the Gordon Institute of Technology in Bowen Street, Melbourne; stores for the City Property Co. in Flinders Lane (1889); stores for Alston and Payne in McKillop Street (1888) and the similarly gigantic and brick Victoria Sugar Company Works, Beach Street, Port Melbourne.5

Description - A large six-storey, red brick and stucco factory building with basalt sills and parapeted roof line. Three facade bays are expressed by parapet pediments and some storeys divided by string-moulds, below the parapet cornice.

Reputedly riveted wrought-iron columns and beams are the internal structure with timber floors fire-proofed by the Traegerwellbech arched corrugated plate linings, with in combustible infill (refer . Victoria Bond 565-71 Lonsdale Street, Melbourne - a five-storey store claimed as the first to use the all-wrought-iron frame combined with the Traegerwellbech system, 1887). As befits its manufactory function, ornament derived from t he Italian Renaissance is applied sparingly (refer later Laurens - Munster Terrace complex).

Integrity - Generally original, some openings altered.

Streetscape - A corner site, original condition and gigantic proportions set amongst low-rise neighbours, determine t hat this is a period landmark.

Significance - Architecturally , like many other store/factory buildings of the period and earlier, this dominates it contemporaries in scale and like the Victoria Bond and Lonsdale Free Store, 541-51 Lonsdale Street (1890), adopts Classical ornament in the commercial oeuvre current since the 1850s . However, both of these examples are comparatively altered.

Other examples include the former wool stores in Brougham Street Geelong and t he former Robur Tea Building in Clarendon Street, South Melbourne . A later example is the former Victorian Sugar Company Works which is architecturally later and a larger more varied complex. This building is a large and original, prominently sited and competently ornamented 19th century factory building which possesses early use of all iron fire-proofed framing and was designed by the distinguished architectural firm, Thomas Watts and Sons. It is of State importance as an indicative and surprisingly original example of the fast disappearing large industrial buildings of the late 19th century. Historically, the earliest known surviving and most substantial building linked with this most well known of stationary firms: of State importance.

 `A STRANGE CASE.
 In the County Court on Wednesday, Alexander Dick, a contractor, was sued for £200 damages for a violent assault alleged to have been committed by him on Henry Axton, a laborer, residing in West Melbourne. From the evidence for the plaintiff it appeared that on the 4th July last one of his children wheeled another in a perambulator near to a building the defendant was erecting, and the defendant took the child out of the perambulator and beat it. Plaintiff went to ask defendant why he beat the child, and defendant then struck him, and he returned the blow. Later in the same day the defendant went to plaintiff's house and demanded an apology, which plaintiff would not give, and defendant then assaulted him violently and knocked him down, and kicked him while he was down. Plaintiff was so much injured about the head and face that he had to go to the hospital and stay there over f fortnight;, Defendant's case entirely traversed that for the plaintiff. It was denied that defendant beat the child in the first instance, and averred that plaintiff struck defendant first at the building. Defendant also said that he only went to plaintiff's house to know why he struck him in the day time, and that plaintiff then at once assaulted him, and fell down while he was doing so. A good number of witnesses were examined on each side, and the jury of four who heard the case returned a verdict for plaintiff. damages £20.'

SIR AARON DANKS.

`DEATH AFTER BRIEF ILLNESS.

Noted Charitable Worker.

We regret to announce the death of Sir Aaron Danks, which occurred at his residence, Balwyn road, Canterbury, on Monday evening, after a brief illness. Several years ago Sir Aaron Danks was in poor health, but there was some improvement following a tour abroad in 1925. Sir Aaron Danks was a noted worker in many charitable causes, and an able business administrator and his death will remove from the community one of its most generous and energetic figures, For nine years he was president of the Melbourne Hospital, and in that capacity alone his work was sufficient to have earned deep gratitude from the people of Melbourne. The large amount of time given to work to the Melbourne Hospital, however was only a portion of that which he devoted to philanthropic institutions. Sir Aaron Turner Danks was born at South Melbourne in 1861, and was educated at Wesley College and at Horton College, in Tasmania. After leaving school he entered the business of John Danks and Son (one of the oldest in Melbourne) of which his father. Mr. John Danks, was managing director. The business progressed rapidly under the capable management of father and son, and upon the death of Mr. John Danks the son became head of the firm, which continued to expand as a result of his wise direction. Through his charitable work Sir Aaron Danks was very widely known. Many philanthropic and charitable causes have been indebted to his sympathy. For 23 years he was a member of the Melbourne Hospital committee. Throughout the long period of his association with the Melbourne Hospital he had taken a leading part in the control and management of the institution. He was a past president of the Metropolitan Hospitals' Association, He was also Chairman of the Walter and Eliza Hall Research Institute, and had occupied that position since its inception. Sir Aaron Danks had taken particular interest in movements to promote the welfare of children both as a special children's magistrate, and for several years as president of the Child Welfare Association. He acted several years ago on the executive of the Protectionist Association of Victoria, and was a leading member of the Chamber of Manufacturers. He was also a member of the Melbourne Rotary Club. In 1925 he received the honour of Knight Bachelor. Only last Wednesday Sir Aaron Danks attended a meeting at his office in his capacity as managing director of John Danks and Son Pty. Ltd. He is survived by Lady Danks, by a son (Mr. Frederick Danks, who was his co-director in the business), and by a daughter (Miss Annie Danks). His elder son, Mr. John Danks, died several years ago. The funeral will take place this afternoon in the Melbourne General

SURVEYED PLACES

Cemetery. It will be preceded by a short service at the Methodist Church, at the corner of Balwyn road and Erica street, Canterbury. Hospital Committee's Regret. When the committee of management of the Melbourne General Hospital assembled for the monthly meeting yesterday afternoon Dr. J. H. Stawell, who was elected chairman, said that they met with the knowledge of the death of their president (Sir Aaron Danks). Dr. Stawell explained that, after the transaction of one item of formal business, the committee would adjourn out of respect to the memory of its late president. He then submitted the following resolution, which was passed while members, of the committee stood in silence:- "The committee of management has learned with profound regret of the death of the president Sir Aaron Danks, and desires to express its deep sympathy with Lady Danks and her family in their bereavement. From the date of his election to the committee of management in ??? Sir Aaron Danks took an active part in its deliberations and his election to the office of president in 1918 was a recognition of his abiding interest in everything which promoted the welfare of the hospital. He never spared himself in the advocacy of its claims upon the support of the community. He was always eager to see the adoption of every improvement in medical science to alleviate suffering, and to enhance the prestige of the Hospital and of its research institute, established by the Walter and Eliza Hall trustees. He was a regular visitor to the wards and cheered and encouraged many patients by his kindly disposition, which was touched so readily in the presence of the sick. His courtesy, patience and generosity admirably fitted him for the position which he filled, and his colleagues on the committee of management deplore the loss of one with whom their associations have been so happy. Auxiliary Meeting Postponed. Owing to the sudden death of Sir Aaron Danks, president of the Melbourne Hospital, the annual meeting of the Melbourne Hospital Red Cross auxiliary, which was to have been held today, has been postponed indefinitely. Members are asked to accept this notification as it has been impossible to notify them individually by letter. At the rehearsal of the Melbourne Philharmonic Society last evening the choir stood in silence as a tribute to the memory of Sir Aaron Danks, who was for many years a vice-president and a generous supporter of the society.'

Timeline

John Danks & Son Pty Ltd began as a plumbing business in 1859, established by brothers John and Samuel. It occupied a prominent site in Bourke Street, Melbourne, for 100 years.

The business quickly grew to include factories in Melbourne and Sydney which manufactured and supplied a variety of plumbing and engineering products such as brassware, pumps, windmills and bells.

John Danks & Son Limited was formed

1902

Following John Danks' death in 1902, his son Aaron, later Sir Aaron led the company. Aaron's son Fred, became Chairman and Managing Director upon his father's death in 1928.

1951

In 1951, Danks Holdings Limited was incorporated as a public company and John Danks & Son Pty Ltd became its wholly owned subsidiary. At this time, the company was operating retail and wholesale shops in Bourke Street, Melbourne, and Pitt Street, Sydney, as well as its manufacturing plants in Melbourne and Sydney.

In the mid 1950s, the decision was made to phase out retailing and manufacturing to concentrate on distribution to independent hardware retailers. This decision spurred the construction of a new warehouse in Alexandria, New South Wales, in 1956 and in South Melbourne in 1958 - both situated on the company's previous factory sites. The city premises were then sold.

1958-70

1958 John Danks was appointed as General Manager and subsequently in 1966 Managing Director. Over the next two decades, the company acquired the hardware interests of EL Yencken & Co Pty Ltd and JS Kidd & Co Pty Ltd. To accommodate the rapidly expanding businesses, a decision was made in 1970 to construct the company's first high-rise distribution centre at Braeside, Victoria, and expand facilities in Alexandria New South Wales.

1971

Homestead (hardware) was established as a marketing group for the benefit of the company's independent retailer customers.

1974

Victorian operations were moved to a purpose built, state of the art, distribution centre in Braeside.

1993

Recognizing the need to have a strong retail brand to combat the rapidly emerging corporate warehouse operators, Danks united the members of its Homestead and Homesaver retail groups under one banner - Home Timber & Hardware. Home featured a distinctive turquoise colour scheme and the loveable Sandy and Rusty as advertising icons for the new brand.

2004

The company employs over 400 staff dedicated to servicing the needs of over 240 Home Timber & Hardware Stores, nearly 400 Thrifty Link Stores Hardware Stores, and 100 Plants Plus Garden Centres.

The company has restructured to ensure a clear focus on the functions that drive the business with the appointment of a National Supply Chain manager and the realignment of other operations to increase focus on customers, consumers and suppliers.

Danks continues to develop products, systems and services to help make independent retailers successful in a highly competitive market.

Australian Dictionary of Biography, 2015

Danks, John (1828–1902)

by J. Ann Hone

This article was published in Australian Dictionary of Biography, Volume 4, (MUP), 1972

John Danks (1828-1902), businessman, was born in January 1828 at Wednesbury, Staffordshire, England, son of John Danks, a wrought iron and gas tube manufacturer, and his wife Hannah, née Hickman. At 8 he was apprenticed to his father but finished his training with another firm and then joined his brothers, Samuel and Thomas, in starting an iron and tube works in Wednesbury. In 1857 the brothers and their families arrived in the Shaftesbury at Melbourne. After several unsuccessful ventures the brothers became hardware manufacturers, dealing 'in nearly everything suitable for plumbers, engineers, gasfitters and water supply'; one of their first jobs was the manufacture of pipe connexions for the Yan Yean water supply.

In 1860 Thomas retired and the firm continued as J. & S. Danks until 1871 when Samuel retired. The next twenty years brought rapid expansion: branch shops were established in Sydney and in Christchurch, New Zealand; John's son, Aaron, became a partner and in 1885 started a brass foundry in England; Danks won prizes at the Philadelphia, Sydney and Melbourne International Exhibitions. The number of his employees grew from 35 to 150 and his contemporaries attributed his success to his being 'just the man for the time', one 'whose business was continually enlarged by the demands of a growing city'. Danks believed more in his own ability and in the beneficial effects of the tariff which he had forcefully advocated when the question was vital to manufacturers. In September 1874 he had helped to form the Manufacturers' Association and next year called the meeting from which the Protection League developed; Danks became president of the Emerald Hill (South Melbourne) branch.

The first serious check to Danks's success was the depression of the 1890s; by the end of 1892 the sheet lead mill was idle and 1894 brought a £1503 deficit. Danks was severely shocked but his son could soon write, 'my father has quite pulled himself together again and looks as well as ever'. Indeed, in that year manufacturing was started in Sydney, to the annoyance of their Melbourne rival, John McIlwraith, with whom, however, they reached an agreement. In 1896 Danks won the contract for the City of Melbourne sewerage and two years later it was still making up for the decline in ordinary business. By 1900 he had 200 employees and a capital of £300,000.

Danks was a member of the Emerald Hill Council in 1871-80 and as mayor in 1874-76 was painstaking in his efforts for the ratepayers. In 1877 he unsuccessfully contested the Emerald Hill seat in the Legislative Assembly. He was a founder and director of the Australian and European Bank and a commissioner at the 1888 Paris Exhibition. Deeply religious, he was active in the Methodist Church and a Sunday school-teacher for thirty years. He gave £3000 to the Cecil Street Wesleyan Church, supported many charities and hospitals, and towards the end of his life marked each birthday by giving away £100.

A charming man of slight build, Danks was little changed by success. In his few years of semi-retirement he was happiest at his turning lathe, explaining 'I was always a mechanic and all my people before me were mechanics . . . [there are] few better mechanics here than myself'. He loved his garden and enjoyed music, being able to 'knock out a tune on almost any instrument'. He filled his house with paintings (he gave £100 to the Wednesbury Art Gallery) and his fine library included many books on art, science and metal-work. He continued to own land in Staffordshire but had no wish to return there because 'an Australian can never get used to the English climate'. He died after a short illness at his home, Vermont, Merton Crescent, South Melbourne, on 28 February 1902; he was survived by his wife Ann, née Turner, and by one daughter and one son of their eight children.

There has been a hotel on this site since the 1870's with several name changes. Initially known as Lemmes Family Hotel in the 1880's it became Stewart's Family then Pecotshs and when Emily Mehrten became the licensee in 1893 it became Mehrten's Family. By 1905 it was known as the Carron. Last refurbished in 2004.'

Heritage Inventory: `Comments: 1, 2 & 3 storey building currently on site 1866 map shows building on corner extending along both Spencer and Dudley Streets.'

National Trust of Australia (Vic) Statement of Significance
 `What is significant?

No. 420 Spencer St. is one of the few Streamline Moderne buildings in West Melbourne, and is an outstanding example of this style of building. It was constructed in 1930 and extended to its current form in 1937. The building was commissioned by Australian Glass Manufacturers Co. Ltd. and designed by HW and FB Tompkins. It utilizes both flat and curved surfaces, has little external ornamentation and features vertical fins and horizontal spandrels. The use of materials such as metal windows and door frames reflects an innovative approach to construction consistent with the style.

The building was constructed as a showroom, with large spaces. It reflects the desire for a building in 'the latest' style which was sure to attract attention and prominence for the manufacturers products.

How is it significant?

The building is significant for aesthetic/architectural, historic, social, reasons at a local level.

Why is it significant?

No. 420 is an excellent intact example of the Streamline Moderne style of architecture. The style was more typically used for commercial properties.

The building was designed by the firm of HW and FB Tompkins, who were responsible for a number of significant commercial buildings in the Melbourne business centre in the interwar period, notably Myers in Bourke Street. Whilst this building differs in scale from their larger commissions in the centre of the city, it also represents their most innovative work in the use of the Streamline Moderne building style.

420 Spencer is a rare example of a Moderne building in the western end of the City of Melbourne, and is of a scale appropriate to the lower levels of activities in this area.

Given its corner location, it is significant as a local landmark and should be preserved and re-developed to serve the needs of the local community.

The building is located in an area that does not include many other heritage buildings. Neighbouring buildings include a service station, double storey commercial building, Metropolitan Fire Station and a Motor Inn. Other neighbouring properties are generally of a commercial nature with some residential developments. The integrity of the building stands alone, regardless of its neighbours, and the lack of other heritage buildings is even more reason for preserving this example. There is a scarcity of buildings of this type and style in the City of Melbourne, and the building's architectural style is rare in this area of Melbourne, thus adding to its physical character and visual quality.

Clearly the major architectural significance of the building is found largely in its exterior. The interest is aroused by its use of modernistic styling to create a striking appearance in a utilitarian building housing showrooms, and by the fact that the building is highly visible from Spencer Street and Dudley Street.

According to conservation architects Allom Lovell and Associates, the existing building is:

"of architectural, aesthetic and historic significance at the local level", and

"is significant at the local level within West Melbourne as a building with landmark qualities in a prominent corner location, and a typology which reflects the suburb's industrial character"

(420 Spencer Street, West Melbourne: Heritage Assessment; Allom Lovell & Associates, June 2002)

Historically, the building was the local headquarters and showroom of Australian Glass Manufacturers. The innovations in glass manufacture was an important factor in the development of Moderne buildings in the pre-war period.

History

The shop and dwelling at 441 Spencer Street was constructed c1868. The Sands & McDougall directories seem to indicate that there was an earlier building on the site, occupied by Nankivell Fanning & Co. stores, but described as vacant in 1865 and 1866 and then not listed at all in 1867 and 1868. In 1869 the building reappears, occupied by John Crabtree. In 1872 the building was occupied by John Andrews, a tailor, and then from 1873 until 1890 by a number of hairdressers and tobacconists.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 441 Spencer Street is a double storey rendered Victorian shop, with a splayed corner and a corrugated galvanised steel roof. The plinth is of bluestone. The entrance is located on the corner, and the narrow Spencer Street facade has a shopfront, now altered. All of the other windows have also been replaced, probably originally double hung sashes.

Statement of Significance

The building at 441 Spencer Street, West Melbourne is of local aesthetic and historical interest. The building is demonstrative of the early phase of development of the suburb in the mid-nineteenth century. Despite alterations, the overall nineteenth century form of the shop is intact.

'The Preston Carrying Company was started in 1912 with the belief that one day trucks would replace horse drawn vehicles. The business thrived, operating five-tonne chain driven trucks principally to transport milk from the dairy farms of Thomastown and Epping to Melbourne.

In the spirit of innovative customer service, the company's Buick doubled as a hire vehicle on weekends to chauffeur city folk around the countryside. One weekend, a passenger asked where she could buy a Buick. And so, Preston Motors was born...Australia's own car, the Holden was launched in 1948 with Preston Motors operating as an appointed distributor from the inception of Holden vehicles. The Essendon North location continues to serve their loyal Holden customers.'

History

The rate books and Sands & McDougall directories are unclear as to the history of the house at 491 Spencer Street. A house on this site, then numbered 89, is recorded in the rate books as early as 1865, described as a brick house with four rooms, valued at 26 (pounds) and owned by William Clark, who also owned adjacent properties. There appears to have been a wooden house at the rear, with 2 rooms and valued at 14 (pounds). From 1866 David Clark is recorded as the owner, presumably a relative, and the Clark family continued to own the property until the 1880's; in 1880 the owner is listed as Mrs Clark, presumably a widow, who resided next door at No. 87 for a brief period. By 1890 the owner was listed as Mrs A Cook (she appears in the Sans & McDougall directories from c1885), by which time the Average Annual Value of the property had increased to 70 (pounds), suggesting that the original house had been replaced or substantially refurbished and enlarged. The wooden house is still recorded as being at the rear at that time.

Description/Notable Features

Ethelboro is a double storey rendered brick Italianate style residence. Windows at first floor level are semi circular arched with moulded architraves, while that at ground floor level is a tripartite double hung sash with segmented arched heads and no architraves. The house has a double storey verandah terminated by wing walls embellished with ornate consoles, the timber verandah decoration is not original. The roof is concealed behind an ornate pierced parapet with a central panel bearing the name of the house in raised rendered lettering above a dentilated cornice.

Statement of Significance

Ethelboro, at 491 Spencer Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical interest. The house is representative of residential development of the nineteenth century Boom period, an important phase in the history development of West and North Melbourne. Superficially altered externally, the building is a typical example of a Boom style terrace form residence, and is an important heritage element in the streetscape.

'DEATH OF AN OLD RESIDENT.

A resident of North Melbourne of 37 years standing, passed away very suddenly on Saturday, in Mr Henry Shalless, Architect, of Leveson street. The deceased gentleman sat down to tea on Saturday evening, apparently in good health, but about 10 o'clock was found on the floor of the front room rolling about as if in great pain. He said he thought it was nothing serious, but on Dr

Workman being called in, he expressed an opinion that an artery in the region of the heart had been ruptured. Mr

Shalless lingered till between 11 and 12 o'clock, when he expired. The deceased gentleman was 68 years of age at the time of his death, and was quiet and unobtrusive in his demeanour, but owing to his gentlemanly consideration towards others and probity in business, was universally respected. Mr Shalless took no part in public affairs, but his friendship was much valued by those who knew him best, and he will be greatly missed by the members of his immediate circle of acquaintances. The funeral took place

History

The entries in the Sands & McDougall directories are unclear for the building at 493 Spencer Street. A building at this address is first listed in the directory for 1889, when it was occupied by Alexander Maitland. However, in 1900, no building is recorded at this address, but in 1905 it reappears and was occupied by Clark & Heron, plumbers.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 493 Spencer Street is a double storey shop and dwelling constructed of red brick with a parapeted roof. At first floor level there is a pair of timber framed double hung sash windows. A simple moulded brick cornice extends across the upper level of the facade, above which is an unusual curved parapet which, together with the red face brickwork, imparts an Edwardian character to the building. The shopfront has been altered c1970's.

Statement of Significance

The building at 493 Spencer Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical interest. The building is demonstrative of late nineteenth and early twentieth century commercial development of the inner city area, and contributes the heritage nature of this part of Spencer Street. Of note is the unusual sinuous parapet.

`DIVORCE COURT.

Thursday, 13th December.

The Divorce Court made very good progress with the list of cases to-day. Proceedings opened with Campbell v. Campbell, which was, a petition by James Campbell, a blacksmith, resident of West Melbourne, for a divorce from his wife on the grounds of adultery and cruelty. The union took place in 1874, but soon after wards Mrs. Campbell went in for steady drinking, which involved her husband in debt, and resulted, as is so often the case, a falling away from the paths of virtue. The co-respondent, Edward Flannagan, appeared in court to defend himself, and denied that he had acted so as to place himself in that position, but after hearing the evidence of his own sister and that of other witnesses the court dissolved the marriage.'

History

The building at 502 Spencer Street first appears in Sands & McDougall directories in 1882-83. Melbourne City Council rate books first list the buildings in 1882, describing it as a brick house of five rooms. Originally one of a pair, or possibly a row of four similar houses, it was owned by a Mr James Campbell.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 502 Spencer Street is a double storey rendered Victorian residence built to the property and with a parapeted roof. The upper level is intact, comprising a tripartite arrangement of timber framed double hung sash windows with a rendered hood mould and bracketed sill. The facade has quoining, and the parapet is surmounted by a scrolled pediment. The ground floor has been altered.

Statement of Significance

The building at 502 Spencer Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical significance. The house is demonstrative of residential development of the nineteenth century Boom period, an important phase in the history of West and North Melbourne. Although altered at ground floor level, the overall nineteenth century form is apparent.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 507 Spencer Street is a double storey rendered Italianate style shop built to the property line. The first floor is intact and comprises three double hung sash windows with moulded architraves and bracketed sills. A quiet but very pretty wedding was celebrated on Thursday, July 27th, at St. Mary's Church, Star of the Sea, West Melbourne, when Dr. Edward McDonald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael McDonald, of Carlton, was married to Miss . Esther Doyle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Doyle, West Melbourne^ The Rev. Joseph Egan officiated. The death of Mrs. Hannah O'Brien took place at her home, "Neirboh," 35 Mitford-street, St. Kilda, on June 2. A native of County Tipperary, Ireland, Mrs. O'Brien came to Victoria with her husband, Dennis O'Brien, and a short time after their arrival they took over the management of the Royal Mail Hotel, Spencer-street, West Melbourne. After the death of her husband, Mrs. O'Brien carried on the business for many years before retiring with her family to St. Kilda. Three years ago she again took over the licence of the Royal Mail, assisted by two of her daughters, Betty and Nancy. Mrs. O'Brien is survived by her four daughters, Nellie (Mrs. O'Sullivan), Betty, May (Mrs. F. Conlon), and Nancy. A Requiem Mass for the repose of her soul was celebrated at St. Columba's

HIPWELL, WEIGHT & MASON (later HIPWELL, WEIGHT & ROSS)

Biographical Overview

Like the more well-known partnership of Grounds, Romberg & Boyd, the firm of Hipwell, Weight & Mason (later Hipwell, Weight & Ross) was founded by three young Melbourne architects who had already made names for themselves as individuals: John Hipwell (1920-2007), Charles Weight (1927-1968) and Peter Mason (1932-1962). Sadly, after a very promising start in the early 1960s, the firm had petered out by the end of the decade after the early and tragic deaths of two of its three original partners.

Born on 30 November 1920 in the Victorian town of Leongatha, John Buckland Hipwell was educated at the state school in nearby Maffra and later attended Scotch College in Melbourne. His architectural studies at the University of Melbourne were interrupted by the Second World War, during which Hipwell served with the 3rd Australian Survey Company (as did several other soon-to-be prominent Melbourne architects, including Neil Clerehan, Robin Boyd and Kevin Pethebridge). Completing his degree in 1948, Hipwell worked for architects Fritz Janeba and later Martin & Tribe. When Horace Tribe left to begin his own practice in mid-1949, he took Hipwell with him. Elected as an associate of the RAI in 1951, Hipwell opened his own office two years later. He started by designing a striking flat-roofed glass-walled house for himself in Warrandyte, which was widely published in the local architectural press. Hipwell went on to design several other houses, most of which were located in Melbourne's outer north-eastern suburbs, near where he lived. One of Hipwell's more unusual commissions was re-dressing the lower room of the Melbourne Town Hall to resemble the interior of a ship, the SS Australiana, for an exhibition of local literature organised by the Australian Book Fair Council.

Seven years Hipwell's junior, Charles Ernest Weight began his architectural career in the early 1950s in the office of Frederick Romberg. Weight was elected as an associate of the RAI in 1952 and, by the following year (coinciding with Romberg entering into partnership with Roy Grounds and Robin Boyd), had opened his own office. Like John Hipwell, Weight commenced his independent practice by designing a house for himself, which (as had been the case for Hipwell) garnered much attention in the architectural press. Weight went on to complete several other residential projects, as well as commissions for factories and a medical clinic.

Five years younger than Weight and twelve years younger than Hipwell, Peter Mason completed a Diploma of Architecture at the Melbourne Technical College (now RMIT) and a Bachelor of Architecture at the University of Melbourne. He became an associate of the RAI in 1955 and obtained a position in the office of H A & F L Norris. In 1957, while still working there, Mason and three other young architects entered a design competition for the "Ideal Family Home", and won second prize. '

Fishermans Bend Heritage Study -2013

'One of the earliest of the noxious trades was Kitchen & Sons soap and candle works on Ingles Street. Established initially in 1856 as a backyard concern, but forced to move by the council, the company acquired the Ingles Street site in 1859 manufacturing candles, washing blue, soap, soda crystals, glycerine and baking powder. 33 The works was substantial with more than a dozen buildings, marked as the "Apollo Candle factory" on MMBW Plans (note a similarly named Apollo candle factory was on the Maribyrnong River at Flemington).34 Kitchen had acquired the Apollo company in 1883. In 1962 J. Kitchen & Sons Pty Ltd joined fellow soap manufacturer Lever Brothers Pty Ltd, forming Lever & Kitchen Pty Ltd. The firm was later restructured as Unilever in 2000, and later taken over by Pental and very recently Symex Holdings Limited. The Ingles Street works progressively expanded with its southern boundary street moving twice. Initially this was "Kitchen Street", which aligned with White Street on the west side of Boundary Street, 37 then opposite the 'Unnamed govt road' (1950s photo) and finally becoming Munro Street to align with the through route to Montague Street.'

'The first sulphuric acid manufacture in Victoria goes probably back to 1862, when Messrs. Forbes and Co. produced it on the Yarra Bank 'in a very small way'. The enterprise was followed by Clarke and Hoffman, later Smith and Co. and finally Cuming Smith and Co., who round about 1872 built a modern, medium scale mineral acids complex producing concentrated sulphuric acid, nitric and sulphurous acid, ammonium nitrate and phosphatic fertiliser. The acid chambers were sizeable 90 x 20 x 14 feet, compared with the UK plant built shortly before then by Muspratt 120 x 24 x 20 feet. The manager of the establishment, James Cuming, the entrepreneur's son, had received his chemical education in Victoria; the firm received two gold medals at the Melbourne International Exhibition and was 'recommended for the Emperor of Germany's grand prize to the premier industry in the colony'. [11] The Victoria Bone Mills at Yarraville founded 1870 was part of this early complex. [12] Remarkably, 3 000 tonnes of calcium superphosphate were exported to Mauritius and New Zealand. Also at Yarraville were the Victorian Pyrites and Smelting Works and a substantial sugar refinery, the Victorian Sugar Company's Works, and Melbourne Woollen Mills. Nearby, at Footscray, the Apollo Company Works, established in 1873, produced organic chemicals from slaughter yards, glycerine, stearine, oleine and household soap. The company's successor in Sydney, Apollo Stearine Candle Cpy, and another Melbourne soaper, [13] J. Kitchen and Sons eventually, in 1912-14, were absorbed by Lever Bros. Ltd.'

'Australasia's history

William Hesketh Lever was the first person to stamp soap with a brand name and wrap it before selling it to the public. The brand was Sunlight soap and the year was 1885. In the late 1880s, Lever Brothers Sunlight soap was first imported to NZ from the UK. In 1899, Lever Brothers began soap production at Balmain in Sydney, followed by the commencement of production in New Zealand in 1919.

On 2 September, 1929, the UK-based Lever Brothers and the Dutch union of fats and oils businesses Margarine Unie, signed an agreement to create Unilever. The businesses initially aimed to negotiate an arrangement to keep out of each other's principal interests of soap and margarine production, but ultimately decided on an amalgamation instead.

The years following saw significant expansion around the world, and Australasia was no exception. In 1959, Unilever acquired McNivens Ice Cream in Australia followed by Streets and Sennitts. In 1963, the business acquired Rosella Foods (established 1896). In 1968, the John West operation began in Australia and in 1971 Unilever acquired Lipton Tea.

Modern history

In 1982, the Rosella factory in Richmond, Victoria, closed and dry foods production transferred to Knoxfield. In 1988, the Bushells, Rosella Lipton and John West businesses combined to form Unifoods in Australia. In the same year, the New Zealand acquisitions of Oxo, Bushells, Faggs and Quality Packers merged with John West to form Unifoods NZ...'

`INSOLVENCY COURT. MONDAY, 2ND DECEMBER. (Before Judge Noel.) re Thomas Hearty, of Melbourne, brewer '

`The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Saturday 29 May 1880

`A case was heard yesterday before Mr. Justice Molesworth, Chief Judge of the Court of Insolvency, in which Thomas Hearty, an insolvent, whose certificate was suspended for six months by Judge Noel, on the ground of fraud and negligence, appealed against the decision. Judge Molesworth upheld the finding of the lower court, but so far varied the Order as to strike out the ground of fraud, and suspended the certificate only upon the plea of gross negligence. His Honour thought that the insolvent's conduct was culpably negligent, but not fraudulent, but in other respects he confirmed the decision given by Judge Noel.)'

 `LICENSING CASE.

Catherine Shearer, of the Eagle hotel, Spencer-St., West Melbourne, was proceeded against by Inspector Hillard. Mr. Gillott defended. The first charge -was-of allowing drunken persons to assemble on her premises.....'

`North Melbourne Courier and West Melbourne Advertiser' (Vic. : 1895 - 1913) Friday 1 June 1906 `DEFINING DELAY.

`...report of a licensing case heard at the local court last Monday, in respect to which the defendant was charged with "delaying admission " to a member of the police force. ... on Sunday, the 15th inst., three constables went between 1 and 2a.m., to the Eagle hotel, Spencer and Hawke-Sts., West Melbourne, and one of them knocked, and, on the licensee looking out of an upstairs window, called out that the police had an order from a licensing inspector to visit the hotel, and demanded admission. The spokesman of the two then looked at his watch, and noticed that it was 1.26 .when he demanded admission, and on the door being opened by the licensee again glanced at it and found that it was 1.29. On these facts a prosecution for delaying admission was launched, and a conviction obtained. Technically the lapse of time between the disappearance of the landlady from the window, and her appearance at the door, no doubt, is "delay," but the case has an aspect of straining the law. ...when the police came her daughter was ill, at the time supposed to be past recovery, and the defendant was nursing her.. Under such circumstances surely a woman cannot be expected to rush downstairs, and open the door with the alacrity of a fireman swinging himself on a hose cart, and the time that elapsed cannot be said, in view of the surroundings, to be 'unreasonable'.'

 History

The house at 591 Spencer Street was built c1881. The house is first listed in the Sands & McDougall directories in 1882, occupied by Benjamin Woods. In 1890, when the house was given its present street number, the house was owned and occupied by James T Millerd. At that time the house was described in the rate books as a brick house with four rooms.

Description/Notable Features

The house at 591 Spencer Street is a single storey, single fronted Victorian cottage. The walls are of brick, and the steeply pitched transverse gabled roof is clad in corrugated galvanised steel. It has a concave profile verandah which spans between wing walls. The facade is presently obscured by a high fence.

Statement of Significance

The house at 591 Spencer Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical significance. The house is representative of the cottages which were constructed in large numbers in West and North Melbourne in the nineteenth century. Although a high brick fence presently obscures the facade, the house otherwise relates visually to the its neighbour at No. 589. Its unusual side elevation also contributes to the streetscape.....???

The house at 591 Spencer Street was built c1881. The house is first listed in the Sands & McDougall directories in 1882, occupied by Benjamin Woods. In 1890, when the house was given its present street number, the house was owned and occupied by James T Millerd (sic). At that time the house was described in the rate books as a brick house with four rooms.

Description

The house at 591 Spencer Street is a single storey, single fronted Victorian cottage. The walls are of brick, and the steeply pitched transverse gabled roof is clad in corrugated galvanised steel. It has a concave profile verandah which spans between wing walls. The facade is presently obscured by a high fence.

Significance

The house at 591 Spencer Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical significance. The house is representative of the cottages which were constructed in large numbers in West and North Melbourne in the nineteenth century. Although a high brick fence presently obscures the facade, the house otherwise relates visually to the its neighbour at No. 589. Its unusual side elevation also contributes to the streetscape.

Grading Review

Previous grading of D confirmed. The house is representative of modest Victorian residential development in West and North Melbourne. The appearance and streetscape value of the house would be enhanced by the removal of the high brick fence ,

History

Robert Taylor, the owner of these row houses, was also their architect and builder in 1876. He lived in 239 Spencer Street until 1886, but retained ownership for another 10 years. The other occupants included William Stubbs, Richard Manly, Edward Day before 1896, when all the tenants were women, Sarah Williams, Margaret Anderson, Caroline Malony, Mary-Ann Barber.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure.

A two storeyed, parapeted and stuccoed brick row of four, with cast iron two level verandahs and iron fences. Typical of their time and type, the houses have little decoration except the roundel pattern iron cornices and other stucco mouldings, together with the parapet urns. Integrity - Parapet urns missing on Nos. 592-6. See No.590.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a long residential streetscape, with limited integrity.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early and near original row of a common form type and part of a streetscape, of regional importance. Historically, a speculative row by the architect-owner-builder.

Recommended Alterations

Parapet urns gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design or sympathetic alternative) Recommendations - Repaint in typical or original colours, replace urns.

Mr. Alexander Dick proposed, and Mr. James Moore seconded, the adoption of the directors' report, which was carried unanimously. The report stated that the business of the company had been exceedingly good during the last half-year, so that

On the motion of Mr. James Moore, seconded by Mr. Alexander Dick, the directors' remuneration was increased to £200 a year amongst them. History

These row houses were built in two separate stages by and for Alexander Dick, who was a carpenter. Nos. 599 to 607 Spencer Street were built in 1867, with Alexander Dick himself living in No.599 for the first ten years, the other four houses were added in 1879 and were all leased, first by Alexander, then after 1890, by John Dick, an estate agent of Collins Street, and probably Alexander's son. The many tenants were transient, such as Hugh O'Brien, Thomas Hoare, William Bailey, James and Isabella Nicholls, to name but a few.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the verandah roof and structure and unpainted decorative brickwork. A parapeted, single storey row of nine coloured brick and stucco houses, possessing cast iron decorated verandahs and stuccoed, corniced chimneys. A segment arched entablature, flanked by urns on pinnacles, occupies the parapet centre.

Integrity - What presumably were timber picket front fences have been replaced. Streetscape - An isolated, but long row creating in itself, a streetscape.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a common type but extensive in size and prominent in the street, of local importance.

Historically, Alex Dick exemplifies the developer-builder who converts his builders yard to house lots, of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Fences replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design or sympathetic alternative) Bricks part painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) Recommendations- Replace picket fence (arrow head or original), repaint trim with typical or original colours, consider zoning provisions to maintain original form and use.

The report stated that the business of the company had been exceedingly good during the last half-year, so that after paying a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent, they could afford to divide a bonus of £1,500, the reserve fund standing at £3,000. On the motion of Mr. James Moore, seconded by Mr. Alexander Dick, the directors' remuneration was increased to £200 a year amongst them. 599-615 SPENCER STREET

History

These row houses were built in two separate stages by and for Alexander Dick, who was a carpenter. Nos. 599 to 607 Spencer Street were built in 1867, with Alexander Dick himself living in No.599 for the first ten years, the other four houses were added in 1879 and were all leased, first by Alexander, then after 1890, by John Dick, an estate agent of Collins Street, and probably Alexander's son. The many tenants were transient, such as Hugh O'Brien, Thomas Hoare, William Bailey, James and Isabella Nicholls, to name but a few.

Description

A parapeted, single storey row of nine coloured brick and stucco houses, possessing cast iron decorated verandahs and stuccoed, corniced chimneys. A segment arched entablature, flanked by urns on pinnacles, occupies the parapet centre.

Integrity - What presumed were timber picket front fences have been replaced.

Streetscape - An isolated, but long row creating in itself, a streetscape.

Significance

Architecturally, of a common type but extensive in size and prominent in the street, of local importance. Historically, Alex Dick exemplifies the developer-builder who converts his builders yard to house lots, of local importance.

Recommendations- Replace picket fence (arrow head or original), repaint trim with typical or original colours, consider zoning provisions to maintain original form and use.

History

These row houses were built in two separate stages by and for Alexander Dick, who was a carpenter. Nos. 599 to 607 Spencer Street were built in 1867, with Alexander Dick himself living in No.599 for the first ten years, the other four houses were added in 1879 and were all leased, first by Alexander, then after 1890, by John Dick, an estate agent of Collins Street, and probably Alexander's son. The many tenants were transient, such as Hugh O'Brien, Thomas Hoare, William Bailey, James and Isabella Nicholls, to name but a few.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the verandah roof and structure and unpainted decorative brickwork. A parapeted, single storey row of nine coloured brick and stucco houses, possessing cast iron decorated verandahs and stuccoed, corniced chimneys. A segment arched entablature, flanked by urns on pinnacles, occupies the parapet centre.

Integrity - What presumably were timber picket front fences have been replaced. Streetscape - An isolated, but long row creating in itself, a streetscape.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a common type but extensive in size and prominent in the street, of local importance.

Historically, Alex Dick exemplifies the developer-builder who converts his builders yard to house lots, of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Fences replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design or sympathetic alternative) Bricks part painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

proposed, and Mr. James Moore seconded, the adoption of the directors' report, which was carried unanimously. The report stated that the business of the company had been exceedingly good during the last half-year, so that after paying a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent, they could afford to divide a bonus of £1,500, the reserve fund standing at £3,000. On the motion of Mr. James Moore, seconded by Mr. Alexander Dick, the directors' remuneration was increased to £200 a year amongst them. Councillor Richardson moved, Mr. James Moore seconded, and it was resolved, to increase the salary of the manager, Mr. George Baker, by £50 a year.'

Nos. 599 to 607 Spencer Street were built in 1867, with Alexander Dick himself living in No.599 for the first ten years, the other four houses were added in 1879 and were all leased, first by Alexander, then after 1890, by John Dick, an estate agent of Collins Street, and probably Alexander's son. The many tenants were transient, such as Hugh O'Brien, Thomas Hoare, William Bailey, James and Isabella Nicholls, to name but a few.

Description/Notable Features Notable features include the verandah roof and structure and unpainted decorative brickwork. A parapeted, single storey row of nine coloured brick and stucco houses, possessing cast iron decorated verandahs and stuccoed, corniced chimneys. A segment arched entablature, flanked by urns on pinnacles, occupies the parapet centre. Integrity - What presumably were timber picket front fences have been replaced. Streetscape - An isolated, but long row creating in itself, a streetscape.

Statement of Significance Architecturally, of a common type but extensive in size and prominent in the street, of local importance. Historically, Alex Dick exemplifies the developer-builder who converts his builders yard to house lots, of local importance.

Recommended Alterations Fences replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design or sympathetic alternative) Bricks part painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) Recommendations- Replace picket fence (arrow head or original), repaint trim with typical or original colours, consider zoning provisions to maintain original form and use.

'Trustee Companies

Towards the end of the 19th century, as the gold-rush generation died, an opportunity arose for companies to administer deceased estates. William Templeton issued a prospectus for the Trustees Executors & Agency Co. Ltd in 1878, but the company's commencement was delayed until the passage of a special Act of Parliament in 1879.
The novelty of the concept and considerable controversy surrounding aspects of the company's articles of association notwithstanding, four new firms followed: the Perpetual Executors' and Trustees' Association of Australia Limited and the Union Trustees, Executors and Administrators' Co. Ltd were both established on 8
December 1885, and the National Trustees, Executors, & Agency Co. of Australasia Ltd and the short-lived Colonial Permanent Trustees, Executor & Agency Co. Ltd were formed in late 1887.

These trustee companies - whose offices were in the heart of the financial district west of Elizabeth Street, mostly in either Collins Street or Queen Street - were important participants in the investment market, particularly before World War II. Restricted by government regulation to government securities and mortgages, they were run conservatively by boards drawn from the banking and insurance industries. The four Melbourne firms had a disproportionate share of the national industry up to the end of World War I, despite the emergence of provincial and interstate competitors. There was little change until the early 1960s, when the Union and the National absorbed smaller rivals, while the Perpetual became part of the new Sydney-based Perpetual Trustees, comprising Victorian, New South Wales and Queensland partners. The industry was rocked in 1983 when the oldest and most prestigious firm, Trustees Executors & Agency, failed after abandoning its conservative investment practices to make

Primitive Methodist Church

Background history

Earliest members of the Methodist sect arrived in Port Phillip in 1840. The first Minister, Rev. John Hide who arrived in January 1850, conducted the first service held March 1850 in a small church in La Trobe Street, Melbourne. A Church in Heidelberg was built in 1854 and headquarters at a new Church was built in 1864 in Lygon Street, Carlton.

Williamstown reputedly received the first protestant services outside of Melbourne town, in c.1838 (A Ackerly: cites Curtain, History of Williamstown [1889]). Reputedly, Charles Stone's day school was used then as a chapel until a timber chapel and school house were provided on a reserve in Ann Street in 1841, when regular services began (Ada Ackerly queries Stone's presence in the town pre 1841, and cites tenders called by Stone in 1841). Stone, an ardent Wesleyan, was a builder by trade and had come to Williamstown from Tasmania.

In 1902, various sects of the Methodist and Wesleyan churches formed a union...'

History

John T. Young, was possibly manager of the London Chartered Bank in Collins Street West, at the time this house was built for him in 1887. He continued to own and live here for over 10 years.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the verandah and fence.

A single storey stuccoed brick parapeted row house with an iron fence and panelled cast iron decoration to the verandah. Balustrading, an arched entablature, a shell tympanum, and rosettes beneath a pronounced cornice, comprise the more rich than usual decoration.

Integrity - Generally original, presumably urns have gone.

Streetscape - Part of a long, mainly single storeyed streetscape of 19th century row houses (693-705) which echoes the similar isolated group further to the east (599-615).

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, a typical near original example of a common type and part of a streetscape, of local importance. Historically, possibly identified with a prominent personality in the area, of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) Parapet urns (inappropriate - reinstate original design or sympathetic alternative) Recommendations - Repaint in typical or original colours, consider zoning provisions to maintain residential form and use.

History

The builder, William Hardie, built both of these houses as an investment in 1875, selling them several years later to John Harris. After 1885, they were sold separately, 701 Spencer Street going to Michael Shanahan, who lived there until at least 1897, James Ward bought 699 Spencer Street and leased it to Andrew Kilgour, a Queensberry Street tailor.

Description/Notable Features Notable features include the verandah and fence. Built as three of four similar houses (see also 695-5), these single storeyed houses are single fronted, were of polychrome brickwork and stucco and possess cast iron fences and decorated verandahs. Arched entablatures with shells, are used alternately with balustraded and guilloche decorated parapet walls, an acroterion and scrolls are also used on 701.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an altered pair which represents a common type but which is also part of a streetscape, of local importance.

Historically, one of the many owner builder speculations in the area, of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Bricks stuccoed, parapet urns (inappropriate - reinstate original design or sympathetic alternative)

Recommendations - Repaint trim in original or typical colours, consider restoration of No. 699, consider zoning provisions to maintain residential form and use.

METROPOLITAN MERCHANTS, IMPORTERS, AGENTS, ETC.

'Dean, Wm., and Co., Melbourne. This business of oil and colour and drysaltery merchants was established about 1859 by Mr. Reuben A. Fitch, who came from London for the express purpose, in the interests of Messrs. Blundell, Spence and Co., London, oil and colour merchants; Chas.

Turner and Son, London, varnish manufacturers; Walter

Carson and Sons, London, anti-corrosive paint

manufacturers; Heywood, Higginbotham, Smith and Co.,

Manchester, paperhangings manufacturers; the Leather

Cloth Co. (Crockett's patent); G. B. Kent and Sons,

London, brushmakers; Winsor and Newton, London, artists' materials manufacturers, and numerous other influential firms of England, America, and the continent of Europe. The partners each retired, with a competence, 1st

April 1874, when the entire stock was purchased by, and the most important of the agencies transferred to Mr.

William Dean, by whom the business has since been conducted under the style of Wm. Dean and Co. Mr. Fitch in 1869 took into partnership Mr. J. B. French, the business being carried on as Fitch and French in premises adjoining those now occupied. Under the new management the business, although altered in some of its details, suffered no diminution in its extent. Mr. Dean's intimate acquaintance with the trade, acquired from his connection with the business established by him in 1854 in Elizabeth-street (now Wm. and Geo. Dean) enabled him to anticipate every requirement necessary for the trades of house painters, decorators, paperhangers, artists, coach and ship painters, &c., and the business has so increased that other stores are held under rent for the storage of large stocks of goods, exclusive of those in bond. The premises, 91 Flinders-lane east, are Mr. Dean's freehold, and have a frontage of 76 ft., consist of a cellar and three flats, and are fitted with a hydraulic lift, capable of raising two tons. The cellar is principally used for the storage of oils in bulk, also paints, white lead, &c., and iron. The ground floor is devoted to office accommodation, packing, oils in drums, dry colors and sundries. The paperhangings department occupies the entire first flat, and affords facilities for keeping a very large stock of the newest goods open for the convenience of the trade, besides accommodation for bulk stock. There is also a sponge department, that being an article in which the firm deals largely. The top flat is used for the reception of all light dry goods, colors, &c., in bulk. The business was carried on solely by Mr. Dean until 1st October 1882, when Mr. A. W. Walsh was admitted a partner. Mr. Walsh retired in 1887 and proceeded on a visit to England. Mr. Dean paid his first visit to Europe, after an absence of twenty-nine years, in 1881, via America per C. P. route, and returned in ten months. In March 1883 Mr. Dean repeated his visit to Europe, accompanied by his wife and daughters, again going by America, but by the new southern route (Atchison and Topeka line) which traverses the entire territory of California, and passes through Arizona and New Mexico, and by way of Kansas, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Washington, and Philadelphia to New York. On the way the party "stopped-off" at many interesting places and important cities on the route.

After staying about two months in London they went to the Continent by way of Amsterdam (where Mr. Dean had to attend the International Exposition in his capacity as commissioner for Victoria), thence up the Rhine, through Switzerland, across the Simplon pass into Italy, where they visited all the principal cities; thence to Sicily, and on to Paris, by way of the Riviera, reaching England early in May, and Melbourne in December 1884. Mr. J. B. French, formerly of Fitch and French, is now the active partner in the firm, and Mr. Dean contemplates an early retirement, after forty years of business life.'

(Differs from the V&M account)

`Established in 1854 by brothers William & George Dean, the first Dean & Co. emporium was located off Elizabeth St, adjoining The Age newspaper's office. As Melbourne grew, so too did Deans, expanding into the Age building and then to a 5 storey complex in Equitable Place (off Collins St), where the extensive business in brushes, paints, wallpapers and artists materials serviced the soon to be hub of the art trade in Melbourne. Their range included materials designed to "fulfil the ambition of every man, to gratify the sense of beauty, and to elevate the intellect" wrote George Dean. In 1880 W & G Dean & Co. was one of the first businesses in the new Edison-Bell phone directory in constant use in Melbourne. The completion of a new cable tramway in 1887 brought the opportunity to expand into the inner suburb of Fitzroy. By the mid 1980's the amalgamation with the Camden Art Centre (est 1946) saw Deans become one of the largest retailers of art supplies in the southern hemisphere. 2006 saw the opening of our Brunswick store; and 2007 an amalgamation with Natart; a Footscray based supplier of art, craft, technology and stationery materials to schools, childcare, and business; strengthening an already successful commercial and education division within Deans.'

History

William Gillespie moved from Dryburgh Street, to occupy and own this house from 1884 until he sold it in 1890 to William Dean, who was one partner in a large firm of Flinders Lane wall paper importers, and sold hangings and paints of all sorts. By 1895 the house had passed onto another firm in a similar line of business, Crawford & Co. also of Flinders Lane. The two latter owners leased the house to William Tralor and Henry Nind. William Dean was the founder of William Dean & Co. now Deans Art and Handicrafts Supplies of Lonsdale Street. The business was initially established by him in 1854 in Elizabeth Street and the expertise gained there enabled him to take over a larger concern from Fitch and French in Flinders Lane. From here he supplied paint to house decorators, artists, coach builders, etc. so successfully that he was able to open up many outlets throughout the metropolis. William Gillespie, the first owner, was a partner in a large cartage firm, Hall and Gillespie. He was one of those thousands who tried his luck on the gold fields after 1852, eventually returning to Melbourne to set up his own cartage firm. By the time he built this house, the firm operated with thirty horses and drays. Renowned architect, William Pitt designed this house, one of his few small residential commissions, to be constructed by builder, D. Richards of Emerald Hill.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the verandah, fence and bricks. Closely confined by its site, this double fronted, single storey face brick house has twin window bays, reflected by a bayed iron verandah and hipped roof bays, set against a transverse gable iron clad roof. An iron fence is used at the frontage, whilst other decoration is confined to brackets at the eaves. (Compare with 69 Campbell Street, Castlemaine, 1894, 1421 and 1407 Sturt Street, Ballarat. Mr. David Blair has been making himself very busy interviewing the Minister of Lands, with the object of preventing a piece of ground in King street being used as a site for a State School. Mr. Blair pointed out that if the school was erected a number of the residents would at once remove from the district, as the value of property would be greatly reduced. M. Casey explained that he was almost powerless to interfere in the matter, as the erection of state schools came properly within the control of the department of Public Instruction. The site in question had been originally granted to the City Corporation for the erection of baths, but during the past few months negotiations had been in course of progress between the department and the corporation for. an exchange of this site for a piece of ground near the meat-market, which the council considered would be of more service to them. A promise had also been made to the Minister of. Public Instruction, that if the exchange were made the King street site should be available for the erection of a state school. lie recommended the deputation td have an interview with the Minister of Public Instruction and the City Council. On the subject, and in the meantime promised that the Lands department would not take any steps for the alienation of the land until after the expiration of 14 days. It stated that the books of the society were in a very imperfect state, and no entries had been made in either the-borrowers' or investors' ledgers from last December, 1874, and the cash book and general .ledger were blank from 30th April.....

The paid auditors of the society were Messrs. James Dixon and William "Boyd, and when they made their last audit,, in' April, 1876, they reported that the accounts were in a satisfactory state. Mr; McDonald remarked that that was very extraordinary conduct, and as things were now found to be, he thought they had been guilty of receiving money on false pretences, as they could not have made a proper audit. He, and friends for whom he appeared, had determined to have the matter sifted further, as their auditors had been misleading them. Several other shareholders expressed themselves strongly on the conduct of Messrs. Dixon and Boyd. Mr. F. C. `Blair, David (1820–1899)

by Jill Roe

This article was published in Australian Dictionary of Biography, Volume 3, (MUP), 1969'

`David Blair (1820-1899), journalist, was born on 4 June 1820 in County Monaghan, Ireland, son of Thomas Blair, soldier, and his wife Jane, née Burns, both of Scottish descent. After elementary education he became a 'juvenile teacher' and then went to the Hibernian Military School, Dublin, where he was a model pupil, gifted in composition. He left in 1835, worked in an uncle's business but found it distasteful and in 1840 joined the Ordnance Survey of Ireland as a calculator stationed in Limerick and then Cork. In 1841 he transferred to Southampton where for almost nine years he worked on the triangulation of England and the survey of London. Intelligent, zealous and ambitious, he remained unsatisfied in his work, even speculating in 1848 on a military career, and found expression in supporting the Chartists as a lecturer in Southampton, in reading and in church activities. Deeply interested in intellectual movements he professed social reformist ideas within a Presbyterian piety which provided him at 30 with the missing direction. Attracted by an advertisement in the British Banner, he joined John Dunmore Lang's contingent of trainee clergymen for New South Wales and arrived in the Clifton at Sydney in March 1850.

He was ordained in October and appointed to the Bathurst Street Church. Influenced by Lang's republican views and democratic activism, Blair clashed with him and by November 1851 was at the Turon goldfield, lecturing, preaching, writing and even prospecting. The life was rough and unrewarding and he soon returned to Sydney, joining (Sir) Henry Parkes on the Empire. By January 1852 he was in Victoria, eagle-eyed for advancement. He soon achieved prominence as secretary of the Anti-Transportation League. He was also the Sydney Morning Herald's correspondent and sub-editor on 'The Argus' until 1854 when, dissatisfied with his wage and angered by the conservatism of the Argus during Eureka, he tried unsuccessfully to start a more radical paper. Not surprisingly, he joined Thomas Bright, an ex-Empire man, on the raw, outspokenly egalitarian Age. Involved in political problems similar to those he had pondered as a Chartist, he continuously advocated such principles as fully representative responsible government, totally free selection and the complete separation of church and state especially in education, while attacking inequality, the squattocracy and corrupt politicians. As a supporter of the diggers he also attacked illegal and unjust actions of government at public meetings as well as in print, and so became associated with the radical Land Reform League of 1855. He entered politics himself in 1856.

Periodic employments characterized Blair's career, but his first years in Melbourne were stabilizing. In 1852 he had married Annie Macpherson, sister of James Grant, later minister of lands, and settled to a career as journalist, politician, controversialist and litterateur. With a slashing style, relentless principles and prodigious knowledge he contributed more than the ten thousand leaders attributed to him and the innumerable speeches, lectures, articles, dramatic criticism and letters-to-the-editor on such subjects as surveying, spiritualism, drinking, democracy, Shakespeare or immortality. His articulate involvement in his intellectual milieu, local and British, established him as a man of quality. The Victorian Review could depend on Blair for an abstruse article, the Beefsteak Club for a speech, the Shakespeare Society for a debate, at a time when such men were not abundant. Privately Blair saw himself not only as an intellectual but as a Christian. The man who in 1860 claimed to know the lost secret of Christianity and followed scientific developments remained assured of literal New Testament truth and his own immortality. He had attacked the earlier 'mental hanky-panky' of spiritualism, phrenology and free-thought and was in 1893 debating with theosophists in the Bacchus Marsh Express. His confidence sustained him throughout his multifarious activities.

As a politician Blair achieved little, though as member for Talbot in 1856-59 and Crowlands in 1868-71 he served his constituents' concerns with roads, water and leases; as a parliamentarian his fidelity to constitutional forms made him unpopular. In the 1860s and 1870s he served on the technological commission and was secretary to the commissions on religious education, penal discipline and friendly societies. His public career culminated in the publication of three historical works: in 1876 the fulsome introduction to Henry Parkes, Speeches on Various Occasions Connected With the Public Affairs of New South Wales 1848-1874; in 1878 the pioneering work, The History of Australasia; and in 1881 the grandiose Cyclopedia of Australasia, confidently presented as the essential reference book. He intended to further patriotism and to make a permanent contribution to the civilization of the south, but his work was marred by unashamed plagiarism, inaccuracy and subjective assessments. He died on 19 February 1899 at his home, Oyama, Armadale, and was buried in the Melbourne general cemetery. He was survived by two sons and four daughters.

Too dogmatic as a scholar, too unimaginative as a literary man and too principled as a politician, Blair's contribution came from his role as a man of letters and his talent for journalism. Lack of humility and sympathy led to an unpopularity entirely unrelated to the high standards by which he lived and wrote.

The members having first assembled at the railway offices proceeded to the top of the tower of Montgomerie's West Melbourne Brewery, and from that point of vantage obtained a fine view of the territory which forms the subject of their inquiry. The general opinion of the commissioners, after studying the prospect, seemed to be that a viaduct is needed from Latrobe-street, over the railway lines, to the proposed new docks, and that, whatever may be done with Bourke and Collins streets, Flinders-street must, be extended and materially widened...'

George Stacey, of the Burton Brewery, Stanley-street, West Melbourne, the facts of which are familiar to our readers, will be presented at the city court this morning, on the above charge. 'Table Talk' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1885 - 1939) Thursday 1 January 1903

A chicken which comes home to roost after 14 years, is a very rare bird, and dear at £40,000. In February, 1888, Mr. W. T. Jones acted as broker in floating the Montgomerie Brewery. Mr. Robert King Montgomerie received £105,000 for his West Melbourne Brewery, but the investing public paid to the promoters £140,000, a slice of the profit going into the pocket of Mr. Jones. Now the wealthy broker, who is residing in London, has been ordered to pay the liquidators of the Montgomerie Brewery Company £40,00 and the cost of a fourteen days' trial.'

Melbourne Breweries, The First & Last Factories

(City of Melbourne -City Gallery exhibition catalog)

'...The other common feature of brewery architecture was the combination of closed arches and arched windows with polychromatic brickwork. This industrial interpretation of the Romanesque style may have been introduced to Melbourne by the leading architect James Wood after a visit to Italy during the 1860s, some time before the Romanesque revival in the USA began to influence commercial and public buildings in Australia. Most of the surviving brewery buildings in Melbourne express this distinctive aesthetic, as do several other industrial and warehouse buildings'

'3. Yorkshire Brewery, Wellington Street, Collingwood. Yorkshireman John Wood built a small brewery in 1861 next to his Yorkshire Hotel in Wellington Street, and was sufficiently successful to finance the construction of a six story brewing tower in 1876.

A successful architect of residences, factories and hotels, Wood's son James excelled himself with his father's brewing tower, creating one of the most visible landmarks'

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

The building at 61-63 Stanley Street is an Edwardian red brick factory with a gabled parapeted roof. The facade has a centrally located vehicular entrance, which appears to be a later alteration, fitted with a steel roller door.

Flanking the entrance are segmented arched windows within recessed segmented arched panels. The gable end has a red brick capping and corbelled piers at each end.

Statement of Significance

The building at 61-63 Stanley Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical interest. The factory is demonstrative of industrial development of the area in the early twentieth century. Substantially intact, the shop is a typical Edwardian utilitarian structure, relieved by robust red brick detailing. Of particular note is the broad gabled facade.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. Since the previous study, render infill to the gable end has been removed. Despite alterations to the central opening, the building is a good example of a utilitarian Edwardian factory.

'As the name suggests Barrett Bros. and Burston is a combination of two families. Both the Barrett's and the Burston's have been associated with the Australian malting industry for much more than a century. The two families had widely different origins in the malting business. The Barrett family the founding father William Barrett, was an enterprising bank clerk in England who began malting and a part time operation; in the Burston family, Samuel Burston was a storekeeper in a small Victorian country town who saw the opportunity to buy barley from his clients and use it for malting. In the years which followed, a move to Australia by the family Barrett and much competition between the two dynasties, the merger finally took place in 1912 with the founding of Barrett Bros. and Burston and Co. Pty Ltd. Despite the enormous increase in production following the end of WWII, Barrett Bros. and Burston and Co Pty Ltd were still unable to keep pace with the growing demand for malt. Over the years it has changed ownership from many including Elders IXL, ConAgra Foods, United Malt Holdings (UMH) and now GrainCorp. Barrett Burston Malting Co. part of GrainCorp Malt have 4 plants across Australia

The houses at 95-97 Stanley Street, originally Nos. 43-45, were built c.1878. The pair is first listed in the Sands & McDougall directories in 1879, when the occupants were Alfred Webb and Thomas Dougall. That year, the rate books list the houses, owned by Moses Parkes, as a pair of four-room brick houses each with an Annual Average Value of #32.

Description/Notable Features

The houses at 95-97 Stanley Street comprise a pair of single-storey, Victorian, semi-detached, rendered brick cottages with a transverse gabled corrugated galvanised steel roof. Each house has a small skillion-roofed verandah between wing walls which are embellished with rendered consoles. The verandahs retain their cast iron lacework friezes and brackets, although the cast iron palisade fence at No. 95 has been removed. A parapet with a moulded cornice extends across the facade, surmounted in the centre by a scrolled pediment. Chimneys are rendered, with moulded cappings. The side wall of No. 95, facing a bluestone pitched lane, is of face brick, now painted.

Statement of Significance

The houses at 95-97 Stanley Street, West Melbourne, are of local aesthetic and historical interest. The pair is representative of the modest dwellings which were erected in the late nineteenth century in large numbers in West and North Melbourne. Largely intact externally, they are typical examples of the Italianate style applied to small houses.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Previous grading of D confirmed. The houses are representative and substantially intact examples of their type and style.

City of Melbourne Heritage Review (1999)

History

The pair of houses at 99-101 Stanley Street was built c.1877. The houses are first definitely listed in 1878, when they were occupied by James Cullen and Alexander Hart. The following year the rate books show John Fernand and Hart as the occupants of two three-room brick houses owned by a Mrs Burns, each with an Annual Average Value £22.

Description

The houses at 99-101 Stanley Street comprise a pair of single-storey Victorian brick cottages with transverse gabled roofs. The roof to No. 99 is clad in corrugated galvanised steel, whilst that at No. 101 is slated. Each house has a skillion-roofed verandah and a high metal fence, not original. Part of the verandah roof at No. 99 has been removed. The facade to No. 101 retains its timber-framed double-hung sash window. The appearance of the houses have been marred by the painting of the brickwork.

Significance

The houses at 99-101 Stanley Street, West Melbourne, are of local aesthetic and historic interest. Reasonably intact externally, albeit painted, the houses are typical examples of modest late nineteenth century dwellings which were constructed in large numbers in West and North Melbourne. The houses are important elements in the streetscape.

Grading Review

Upgraded from E to D. The pair is a representative and substantially intact example of its style and type.

An estimate of £2400 was made for the erection of two brick factories in Stanley St, West Melbourne for successful master baker, Joseph Doyle. W J Davy consulting engineer, 430 Bourke St, Melbourne was the designer of this former factory pair (142-144 refaced but still existing). The roof was saw-tooth in profile, supported on timber trusses, entry was via timber folding doors and once inside the factory floor was open with a small toilet

(Assessed as not individually significant)

The following assessment found that the building was not above the locally significant threshold but was contributory to the general theme of Interwar factory development in West Melbourne.

What is significant?

For an estimated £1800, this parapeted brick factory with its sawtooth roof and steel-framed multi-pane glazing, was erected in 1938 for R. C. or E. W. Brown Esq in place of three Victorian-era houses. Building permit application drawings show a much wider building than has survived and a proposed flag flying from the parapet bearing the acronym 'C.A.B.'. The design engineer was L. Boyd Mercer. Early occupiers were the Commonwealth Steel Company, steel merchants.

Although possessing some unusual coloured brickwork, major changes have taken place to this building since the design stage, with apparent reduction in its façade length, and bricking in of openings.

How is it significant?

Brown's factory is indicative only of the Interwar industrial growth theme in West Melbourne.

Why is it significant?

Brown's factory is of contributory significance only, historically, to the Interwar industrial theme in West Melbourne generally but not to a heritage precinct. The building is below threshold for a locally significant individual heritage place.

Cullens of Carrick, Ballinlough, Co. Roscommon, Ireland Gerry Cullen of Australia sent me this story:

"My great great grandfather was James (or at least we are led to believe from one old land notice) who was said to be married to Sarah Cullen, of Carrick, Ballinlough, Co. Roscommon, Ireland. Sarah died circa 1861 and the land and house was inherited by my great grandfather Michael Cullen who was married to Mary Scarry, Michael was born circa 1829 and died 1881 aged 52. Therefore his mother Sarah would have been born in the early part (or possibly even before) the 1800's.

"There is no mention of James Cullen in any other documents but an Andrew Cullen appears between the years 1832 and 1840's and I am anxious to find out if this

SURVEYED PLACES

Andrew was in fact an elder brother of Michael or perhaps Sarah's husband (and not James). It is also possible that this Andrew may have died or emigrated during the Great Famine period in Ireland as his name is not mentioned in any documents after. The name Andrew was inherited by my grandfather Dominick Andrew Cullen so there may be a very close family connection.'

Also known as the Primary Valuation of Ireland, the work of surveying landowners and tenants throughout Ireland for taxation purposes was carried out between the years of 1848 and 1864. William Henry Fitchett, clergyman, writer and educator was born in 1841 at Grantham, Lincolnshire, a son of William and his wife Hannah Hubbard. The father, mother and five children settled in Geelong in 1849. William Henry's formal schooling was brief at a Wesleyan denominational school and he was mainly self-educated by his voracious reading. Multiple laboring jobs were replaced by his becoming an accredited local preacher in 1865 and the following year he entered the Wesleyan ministry with positions at numerous Victorian towns from 1866 until 1881. In 1870 he married Jemima Shaw and in 1875 he graduated from the University of Melbourne with a B.A.

He was founding president of the Methodist Ladies' College Kew, Victoria in 1882 and was elected president of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference of Victoria and Tasmania in 1886. His career as a journalist and writer began with a weekly column, 'Easy Chair Chat' in the Methodist Spectator and Wesleyan Chronicle under the pen name 'XYZ' (1875-79). In 1882 he became the editor of the Southern Cross, a weekly religious paper, and in April 1900 his son, Thomas Shaw Fitchett (? ca.1871-1949), a printer and publisher ... became manager. In 1902, Thomas Shaw Fitchett published the New Idea, a women's magazine which became Everylady's Journal in 1911. William Henry wrote occasional articles for this as well as becoming editor in 1904 of his son's companion publication, Life. A run of T. Shaw Fitchett's WWI Military Life Magazine 1916-17 ...The popularity of new adventure comic strips was not lost on Fitchett Bros. Pty Ltd. of West Melbourne, the proprietors of the New Idea, Australia's oldest women's magazine. The company's founder, Thomas Shaw Fitchett, couldn't have failed to notice the growing success that its main rival The Australian Women's Weekly, was enjoying with its new comic strip, Mandrake the Magician, which made its Australian debut on 1 December 1934.....Part of the New Ideas editorial response to this new competitor was to introduce new features.... the New Idea unveiled Buck Rogers as its new comic strip serial on 17 April 1936.'

'Two storey brick building built in the early 1920's (sic) & refurbished 1991'

Newspapers:

Neos Kosmos 22 Jun 2012

'A dinner dance held by the Cephalonian Society of Victoria is set to rock West Melbourne next Saturday night.

The night will include stand-up comedian Jim Liamatos, the Manasis dancing group entertaining the crowds with traditional dance, the Greek band Xrises Notes will be providing the dancing tunes and there will be raffle prizes, catering by Meraklis and the night will be filmed for Channel 31 for a new Greek show called 'Peter, are you serious?' Peter Diakrousis - assistant treasurer of the Cephalonian Society - says this dinner dance is a great opportunity for the youth to get involved once again and explore their cultural heritage.

"I am trying to create a young group," he told Neos Kosmos, "teach the young all about Cephalonia - the island and its culture; its food and wine; its sweets sold around the world." He says by involving the youth, he can teach them about Cephalonian traditions and dancing but also they can help keep the club alive. By getting involved in the Cephalonian Society of Victoria, youth will be able to network with other members, stay in touch with Cephalonians in Greece for easy travel advice, as well as network with members in Victoria in a professional capacity too.

As it stands, there are only about four young members of the society and through getting the youth involved, Peter says the club will stay stronger than ever.'

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)History -

Robert Walton, the original grantee and builder and plasterer of Lygon Street Carlton, probably built these shops as an investment, during 1864-5. He owned them for over thirty years and leased them to such traders as William Marsden, a tobacconist, who was in 175 Victoria Street for over 10 years; Isaac Long a shoemaker, Sam Jacobs' 2 a dealer; James Nesbitt a fruiterer; and James Hogan a bootmaker.³

Of note is that the rated valuation increased from 30 pounds to 54 pounds each c1890, when the description changed to 'brick shop, four rooms' from that with '•••' 'three rooms'.⁴ This may mean the addition of a storey..⁵

Description -

A two-storey stuccoed brick shop and residence row of three with an iron Corporation verandah and parapeted roof line. The central wall bay of the three parts, is elevated and given a gabled entablature with vermiculation, flanking piers and pilasters, pineapples and an acroterion as decoration. Architraves and stepped string and cornice moulds provide further ornament. Timber shop fronts exist on 175.

Integrity -Ingo-shop fronts have been replaced and the street

verandah removed on 179-81

Streetscape -A major corner element in the Victoria Street commercial .

precinct, paralleling with 187-9 on the contiguous corner of the block at Capel Street.

Significance -

Architecturally, a shop and residence row of mixed derivation and integrity, but generally exemplifying the late nineteenth century with its upper facade splayed, return street verandah and shop front remnants constituting a major streetscape element: of regional importance.

Historically, a shop row with an early beginning, built by one of the many developer-builders in the area and occupying a prominent location in the retail area: of local importance.

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Saturday 30 October 1875

An action for libel was tried in the Supreme Court yesterday, in which a tinsmith named Morgan, residing at Hotham, sued Walter H. Hughes, a connexion of his by marriage, for Publishing in the North Melbourne Advertiser some verses reflecting on Morgan's character. The verses were of a stupid description. The editor of the paper explained that he only pat them in because Hughes, who was a respectable man, assured him that the poetry did not refer to anyone in the district. The defendant allowed judgment to go by default, and did not appear, so that the jury had only to assess the damages. The jury gave the plaintiff £50.

History -

These buildings were built as shops in 1873 for Robert Pringle, a baker of Hotham. By 1876, 195 was run as the Prince Albert Hotel (also listed as the Albert Hotel) 2 still under the ownership of Robert Pringle until near the turn of the century. His licensees included Alfred Hardham, Michael Coffey and Ellen Farrell. 3 197 was Pringles' own bakers shop being occupied later by other bakers such as James Shiels.4

Description -

A two-storey stuccoed brick parapeted former hotel, set on a corner site and built to the street alignment. A simple Italian Renaissance derived facade with arched fenestration, cornice, impost and string-moulds, and pilasters located around doorways and the former bar window. A similar upper level facade exists on 197. Integrity -Generally original, blind windows noted; painted sympathetically; parapet orbs missing 195;. Shop front replaced (ingo type)197 and cantilever verandah added.

Streetscape -A corner and major element in the Victoria Street commercial precinct, relating strongly to 197, 199, 201-3 and 205 Victoria Street.

Significance -

Architecturally,

(195) a typical corner hotel of the period, but near original, conservatively but competently elevated and forming a major part in the streetscape: of high regional importance.

(197) a generally altered shop and residence but linking with the important 195 above the verandah: of local importance.

Historically,

(195) as a former hotel and on a corner site, thus achieving social prominence: of regional importance.

(197) the shop and residence of the hotel's owner-builder, Pringle, until his death: of local importance.

Recommendations -

Paint 197 to match 195 or repaint both in typical or original colours; consider removal of cantilever verandah from 197-9 and replacement with a typical (ornamentation verandah; consider restoring ingo shop front of 197, using typical or original details.

History -

These buildings were built as shops in 1873 for Robert Pringle, a baker of Hotham. By 1876, 195 was run as the Prince Albert Hotel (also listed as the Albert Hotel) 2 still under the ownership of Robert Pringle until near the turn of the century. His licensees included Alfred Hardham, Michael Coffey and Ellen Farrell. 3 197 was Pringles' own bakers shop being occupied later by other bakers such as James Shiels.4

Description -

A two-storey stuccoed brick parapeted former hotel, set on a corner site and built to the street alignment. A simple Italian Renaissance derived facade with arched fenestration, cornice, impost and string-moulds, and pilasters located around doorways and the former bar window. A similar upper level facade exists on 197. Integrity -Generally original, blind windows noted; painted sympathetically; parapet orbs missing 195;. Shop front replaced (ingo type)197 and cantilever verandah added.

SURVEYED PLACES

Streetscape -A corner and major element in the Victoria Street commercial precinct, relating strongly to 197, 199, 201-3 and 205 Victoria Street.

Significance -

Architecturally,

(195) a typical corner hotel of the period, but near original, conservatively but competently elevated and forming a major part in the streetscape: of high regional importance.

(197) a generally altered shop and residence but linking with the important 195 above the verandah: of local importance.

Historically,

(195) as a former hotel and on a corner site, thus achieving social prominence: of regional importance.

(197) the shop and residence of the hotel's owner-builder, Pringle, until his death: of local importance.

Recommendations -

Paint 197 to match 195 or repaint both in typical or original colours; consider removal of cantilever verandah from 197-9 ~and replacement with a typical (ornamentation verandah; consider restoring ingo shop front of 197, using typical or original details.

partnership with Williams had been dissolved by deed. There was also a deed of partnership signed when they joined in business.

The firm had an account at the National Bank. He could not say whether he had a private account at the bank afterwards. The deeds of partnership and dissolution were at his house, in Nelson-street, Windsor. The witness was directed to fetch the deeds from his house to the court, and was allowed about two a hours to go for them. He had not returned at 2 o'clock, to which time the case had been adjourned, and it was then further adjourned until the following Monday. The deeds were brought to the court by the insolvent shortly before half-past 2 o'clock, and delivered to the solicitor for the trustee.'

A large two-storey stuccoed brick shop/factory and residence with a parapeted roof line, arched architraved and shuttered upper windows and a rebuilt lower level and verandah. Cornice and string-moulds, lions heads and paired brackets are the only other ornament.

Statement of Significance Architecturally, a large, conservatively designed building of low ground level integrity, but it possesses interesting details (shutters) and a role in the streetscape: of local importance. Historically, interesting as a variation in the use pattern of the street and identified by long tenure to individual firms and use types: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint in original or typical colours; consider restoration of shop front using original or typical details and central ingo; consider restoration of verandah, as original or as Corporation type. Shutters (sympathetic - reinstate original design) shopfront replaced (large centre ingo); street verandah replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative)

Other Comments

Integrity - The former central-ingo timber shop front has been removed as has the street verandah; parapet orbs/urns may have existed once. Streetscape - Part of the Victoria Street commercial precinct.

 `Untitled Photograph [Three men having coffee at Don Camillo cafe, 215 Victoria Street North Melbourne] by Giorgio Mangiamele, film maker and photographer. The café was originally opened in 1950 or 1951 by Dino Camillo who emigrated from Bavaria Treviso just before the outbreak of WW2. In 1950 he was joined by his brother Tarcisio and in 1953 they founded the Camillo Bros. construction company, which later also manufactured terrazzo tiles. This company was sold to the firm Gilberto Crema in 1966 when Tarcisio also returned to Italy for good. It is still operating [2001], under the name Crema Camillo Builders. From c1954 the café/restaurant was run for a few years by Mr. Pravisani [first name unknown]. It is believed that the coffee espresso machine installed at Don Camillo café was one of the first of its type to be imported to Australia from Italy. See P-00262 for a photograph of this machine. Italian Origin.'

Espresso

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

`...In the United Kingdom, espresso grew in popularity among youth in the 1950s, who felt more welcome in the coffee shops than in public houses (pubs).

Espresso was initially popular, particularly within the Italian diaspora, growing in popularity with tourism to Italy exposing others to espresso, as developed by Eiscafé established by Italians in Germany.

Initially, expatriate Italian espresso bars were downmarket venues, serving the working class Italian diaspora – and thus providing appeal to the alternative subculture / counterculture; this can still be seen in the United States in Italian American neighborhoods, such as Boston's North End, New York's Little Italy, and San Francisco's North Beach. As specialty coffee developed in the 1980s (following earlier developments in the 1970s and even 1960s), an indigenous artisanal coffee culture developed, with espresso instead positioned as an upmarket drink.'

`...Giovanni Achille Gaggia had just perfected the modern espresso machine. Andrew Brown-May writes in Espresso, Melbourne Coffee Stories that Gaggia's machine, patented in 1947, "took a great step forward, triumphing over many prior defects" and that the "sleek chrome magic of the machine seduced Europe".

In London, Bancroft saw its potential. "My father (Harry) was a dry cleaner and while I was in London he sold out of the business.

He came over and we visited the Gaggia factory. I talked him into buying a machine. We bought one Gaggia machine and the import licence for Australia."

The Bancrofts quickly established Il Cappuccino in Fitzroy Street, St Kilda, installing their first Gaggia machine. "It had interior brick walls, indoor plants and it seated 150 people," Bancroft says."

Morning, noon and night there were people queuing to get in. Police were called to keep the crowds in check." Within eight months they sold the business and opened El Cubana, in Toorak Road.

The purchase of that first postwar machine and licence launched Melbourne's cafe culture.

Gaggia machines were installed in the University Cafe, in Lygon Street next, then at Pellegrini Bar in Bourke Street and Don Camillo in Victoria Street.'

`OUR LOCAL INDUSTR[ES].

Mr. T. H. Allison, brother of the late Alfred Allison, and who is now carrying on the old-established and widely-known Allison undertaking business, has just had completed to his order one of the most gorgeously-magnificent hearses ever manufactured in the colony. The builders are Messrs. Rintoul and Hopkins, Smith-street, Fitzroy, who are deserving of every credit for the genius of the design and excellence of workmanship displayed. The undercarriage is of a strong modern design, and the driver's seat rests on a "boot," well ribbed with imported wood comprising thirty pieces. The funeral car is of American pattern, and has large plate glass windows on both sides. At each end there are plate glass doors, all surrounded by a bold moulding. The glass is beautifully embossed the side panels with wreaths of passion flowers and convolvulus, with a winged cherub in the centre, the front doors with' an inverted torch (the emblem of death) and the doors at the rear with lamps suspended by chains. The interior of the funeral car is also most elaborately fitted, either side of a slightly raised platform being composed of holly and cedar which is displayed through the glass. The side rails are of plated silver, and the platform itself is of handsome polished wood. There are ornamental carved shutters for the back and side windows, and the substantial over hanging roof may either be be-decked with urns or plumes. Mr. T. H. Allison, the economic undertaker, the proprietor of this elaborate turn-out, ... His head office is 181 Elgin-street, Carlton, and he has branch offices at Derby street, Collingwood, and 307 Victoria-street, West Melbourne. His telephone number is 1182.'

Allison, Alfred, Melbourne. The undertaking business situate at 40 Victoria-street, City, now owned by Mr, Alfred Allison, is one of the largest and oldest in the colony. It was established by his father, Mr. Henry Allison, in 1854, on his arrival from England, first in Wreckyn-street, and afterwards in Howard-street, temporarily, until the present premises in Victoria-street were built. Mr. Henry Allison carried on the business successfully until his death in 1884 closed a busy and energetic life, thirty years of which were spent in this city. Mr. Allison keeps one of the largest stocks of funeral requisites in the market, not only of home manufacture, but also importations from America, Germany, and Birmingham, which are required to meet the demands of an ever-increasing business. The rolling stock is of the latest and best patterns, and the carriages and hearses are among the finest in the colonies. The property has a frontage of 75 ft., to Victoria-street and 55 ft., to William-street, with a depth of 140 ft., giving ample space for a business of magnitude, Mr. Allison's private residence is at Cleveland, Ascot Vale-road, where he also has an office for transacting business.

JOSEPH ALLISON, Hotham Funeral Establishment. Head office :

Errol Street, North Melbourne.

Branch office : Mount Alexander Road, Moonee Ponds.

This well-known business was established in 1886 by the late Mr. Joseph Allison, a very old and esteemed colonist, who had learned his trade in the business of his father, the late Mr. Thomas Allison, Camberwell, London.

On coming out to Victoria he managed the business of his late brother, Mr. Henry Allison, Victoria Street, West Melbourne, and, on establishing himself on his own account in 1886, carried on successfully until the time of his death. The business, which is carried on under the old name by his widow, under the management of her (image Joseph Allison's Head Office, Errol Street) sons, who are Australian natives, enjoys a large and extensive connection throughout the city and suburbs. The premises are furnished with every description of mourning requisites. The vehicles are of the most up-to-date style, and a well-trained staff of assistants is always at hand to carry out the orders of clients.

T. H. ALLISON, Undertaker and Embalmer. Head office : 181 Elgin Street, Carlton. Branches : 307 Victoria Street (near Errol Street), West Melbourne, and 11 Derby Street, Collingwood. Mr. Allison, the proprietor of the above well-known business, was born in West Melbourne in the year 1867, and educated in the district, finishing at the Carlton College. He then entered the business house of his father, the late Mr. Henry Allison, who in 1854 established the undertaking business in Victoria. There he went through every department of the business, acquiring a large experience, and qualifying himself to take over the management, in 1888, of the Carlton branch. Mr. Allison then entered into the study of embalming, as set forth in various American magazines, but his first practical lesson in the art was acquired under Professor Rivers, of the U.S., America, who lectured and demonstrated on the subject, holding classes for the purpose in Melbourne. The custom of embalming dead bodies, which may be traced back to the early days of the Egyptians, is a very necessary one as applied to modern Australia, where the climate necessitates the burial of persons within so short a time after death, and Professor Rivers' system was so complete that by the inducement of Mr. Allison, who was his first pupil in Victoria, several other undertakers also took up the study of the subject. In cases where it is necessary to remove the body from one State to another, or to send it to a foreign country for burial, the system is invaluable, not only from a hygienic point of view, inasmuch as the process of embalming prevents any possible chance of infection, but when the coffin of an embalmed body is opened weeks, or even months, after death the friends and relatives are privileged to behold the face of their dear one as it was in life, and thus all painful and repulsive ideas associated with death and corruption are removed. The custom is a usual one in America, the bodies of nearly every person who dies being embalmed, and in Australia, thanks to the enterprise and active exertions of Mr. Allison, it is gradually winning its way, so much so that it is rather the exception nowadays to find an undertaking firm of any repute without its embalmer. Mr. Allison resides on the premises in Elgin Street, so that clients may be (image of Mr. T. H. Allison. by Johnstone. O'Shannessy and Co.) assured of having their wishes carried out under his personal supervision. He acts himself as conductor on all occasions, and, with his well-trained staff of assistants, in conjunction with hearses and carriages of the most modern and up-to-date style, he is prepared to carry into immediate effect arrangements for all funerals entrusted to him, both large and small. He is the possessor of numerous testimonials from clients for the very able manner in which he has conducted a large number of both private and public interments. Mr. Allison is a member of the Victorian Master Undertakers Association, past president of the Victorian Embalmers Association, member of a great number of friendly societies, and a life member of the North Melbourne branch of the Australian Natives Association. JOHN ALLISON, Undertaker and Embalmer, 94 Simpson's Road, Richmond ; 225 Sydney Road, Brunswick ; and 67 Cardigan Place, South Melbourne. This well-known business was established in 1865 by Mr. John Allison, who was born in London in the year 1844, and educated at the British School, Camberwell, England. He is a son of Mr. Thos. Allison, who was for forty years in business as an undertaker in Camberwell, and was brought up to the trade in his father's establishment. At the age of eighteen, having gained a thorough knowledge of every branch of the business, he considered that it might be applied to better advantage in the colonies, and accordingly, in 1862, came out to Victoria. After three years colonial experience in West Melbourne with his brothers, Mr. Allison started on his own account as an undertaker in South Melbourne. This was in 1865, and he carried on this business and worked up an extensive connection until 1881, when he opened at and made Simpson's Road his headquarters, with an extra branch in Sydney Road. Mr. Allison has built all his own hearses and coaches, a branch of the business which he combined with the supplying to country undertakers of all the necessary adjuncts of the trade, such as coaches, hearses, coffins, coffin furnishings, etc. Latterly he has given up the coach-building branch of his business, at the instigation of the Coach-building Association, but still supplies country customers with furnishings, etc. Mr. Allison is well known as a funeral director, and from the number of testimonials in his possession it is evident that he has carried out all arrangements to the entire satisfaction of his clients. His plant is an extensive one, and, with a well-trained staff of employees, Mr. Allison is prepared to execute any order in town or country in first-class style at the shortest notice. Mr. Allison is a member of all the benefit associations, and takes an active part in all movements connected with several of the most important. He is also greatly interested in sport of every description, and is an enthusiast in shooting, this being his favourite pastime, and when time admits may be found taking a few days' holiday in the country. He married a daughter of Captain John McMillan, master mariner, a very old colonist, and has a family of four sons and one daughter. Three of his sons assist him in his business, and his daughter Amy, now married, is highly accomplished in elocution, painting, and music.

Description/Notable Features

Consisting of a parapeted stuccoed brick pair: one a shop and residence (221) and the other possessing a carriage entrance with a residence over. Simple fenestration (221 with blind hoods) and cornice mouldings provide the typically conservative elevation. Notable features include stable for funeral parlour - 221; doors similar to old type.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, old and of a conservative design, typical of the date, but altered (particularly 221), however the survival of the carriage way to 217-19 provides an uncommon element in the commercial streetscape which communicates the 19th century nature and original use of the building: of local importance. today on a metropolitan-wide basis: of regional importance.

Recommended Alterations Consider reinstatement of shop front and verandah to 221; repaint in original or typical colours; restore the carriage way doors to 217-19. Rezone to local business. Tiles added c 1910.

Other Comments

Integrity - (Referring to a photograph, 'Cyclopedia of Victoria' Vol. 3 p.170) The timber street verandah has been replaced on 221, with a cantilever; the shop front with central ingo and panelled timber plinths, have been replaced; dado tiles have been added to 217-19 and the formerly biparting carriage way doors replaced.

Moonee Valley Thematic Environmental History: 187Birth and death

There are no cemeteries in Moonee Valley but the community has been well served by undertakers. Joseph Allison and Alfred Allison both established businesses in the area in the late nineteenth century. Joseph Allison's main premises were in Errol Street, North Melbourne but he also had a branch office firstly at 10 Puckle Street, Moonee Ponds (in 1890), then at Mt Alexander Road, Ascot Vale. 523 At the same time Alfred Allison, whose main business was located in West Melbourne, had branch offices in Racecourse Road, Newmarket and also in Mt Alexander Road next to the 'Cycling Club'. 524 No doubt the Allisons were related, but the businesses were run as separate entities and in competition with each other' (cites 523 'North Melbourne Advertiser', 21 February 1890.

History

The location of the first Allison mortuary business, under the style of Henry Allison was claimed to have been in 1854 at this address, however since the grant was issued in 1859, this is doubtful. Henry died in 1884, to be succeeded by his son Alfred and several branches were added. Five years later, Alfred died leaving the business to his brother-in-law, Walter Downing when it became.. 'The most prominent and extensively known establishment in the metropolis..' By 1903, branches existed at Moonee Ponds, Newmarket, Clifton Hill (still existing), and High St, Northcote.

Description

Consisting of a parapeted stuccoed brick pair: one a shop and residence (221) and the other possessing a carriage entrance with a residence over. Simple fenestration (221 with blind hoods) and cornice mouldings provide the typically conservative elevation. Notable features include stable for funeral parlour - 221; doors similar to old type.

Integrity - (Referring to a photograph, 'Cyclopedia of Victoria' Vol.3 p.170) The timber street verandah has been replaced on 221, with a cantilever; the shop front with central ingo and panelled timber plinths, have been replaced; dado tiles have been added to 217-19 and the formerly biparting carriage way doors replaced.

Streetscape - In an old but altered part of the Victoria Street commercial precinct.

Significance

Architecturally, old and of a conservative design, typical of the date, but altered (particularly 221), however the survival of the carriage way to 217-19 provides an uncommon element in the commercial streetscape which communicates the 19th century nature and original use of the building: of local importance. Historically, among the oldest group of shops in the area and reputedly the embodiment of an even older business which survives today on a metropolitan-wide basis: of regional importance.

Recommendations

Consider reinstatement of shop front and verandah to 221; repaint in original or typical colours; restore the carriage way doors to 217-19. Rezone to local business.

`OUR LOCAL INDUSTR[ES].

Mr. T. H. Allison, brother of the late Alfred Allison, and who is now carrying on the old-established and widely-known Allison undertaking business, has just had completed to his order one of the most gorgeously-magnificent hearses ever manufactured in the colony. The builders are Messrs. Rintoul and Hopkins, Smith-street, Fitzroy, who are deserving of every credit for the genius of the design and excellence of workmanship displayed. The undercarriage is of a strong modern design, and the driver's seat rests on a "boot," well ribbed with imported wood comprising thirty pieces. The funeral car is of American pattern, and has large plate glass windows on both sides. At each end there are plate glass doors, all surrounded by a bold moulding. The glass is beautifully embossed the side panels with wreaths of passion flowers and convolvulus, with a winged cherub in the centre, the front doors with' an inverted torch (the emblem of death) and the doors at the rear with lamps suspended by chains. The interior of the funeral car is also most elaborately fitted, either side of a slightly raised platform being composed of holly and cedar which is displayed through the glass. The side rails are of plated silver, and the platform itself is of handsome polished wood. There are ornamental carved shutters for the back and side windows, and the substantial over hanging roof may either be be-decked with urns or plumes. Mr. T. H. Allison, the economic undertaker, the proprietor of this elaborate turn-out, ... His head office is 181 Elgin-street, Carlton, and he has branch offices at Derby street, Collingwood, and 307 Victoria-street, West Melbourne. His telephone number is 1182.'

Allison, Alfred, Melbourne. The undertaking business situate at 40 Victoria-street, City, now owned by Mr, Alfred Allison, is one of the largest and oldest in the colony. It was established by his father, Mr. Henry Allison, in 1854, on his arrival from England, first in Wreckyn-street, and afterwards in Howard-street, temporarily, until the present premises in Victoria-street were built. Mr. Henry Allison carried on the business successfully until his death in 1884 closed a busy and energetic life, thirty years of which were spent in this city. Mr. Allison keeps one of the largest stocks of funeral requisites in the market, not only of home manufacture, but also importations from America, Germany, and Birmingham, which are required to meet the demands of an ever-increasing business. The rolling stock is of the latest and best patterns, and the carriages and hearses are among the finest in the colonies. The property has a frontage of 75 ft., to Victoria-street and 55 ft., to William-street, with a depth of 140 ft., giving ample space for a business of magnitude. Mr. Allison's private residence is at Cleveland, Ascot Vale-road, where he also has an office for transacting business.

JOSEPH ALLISON, Hotham Funeral Establishment. Head office :

Errol Street, North Melbourne.

Branch office : Mount Alexander Road, Moonee Ponds.

This well-known business was established in 1886 by the late Mr. Joseph Allison, a very old and esteemed colonist, who had learned his trade in the business of his father, the late Mr. Thomas Allison, Camberwell, London.

On coming out to Victoria he managed the business of his late brother, Mr. Henry Allison, Victoria Street, West Melbourne, and, on establishing himself on his own account in 1886, carried on successfully until the time of his death. The business, which is carried on under the old name by his widow, under the management of her (image Joseph Allison's Head Office, Errol Street) sons, who are Australian natives, enjoys a large and extensive connection throughout the city and suburbs. The premises are furnished with every description of mourning requisites. The vehicles are of the most up-to-date style, and a well-trained staff of assistants is always at hand to carry out the orders of clients.

T. H. ALLISON, Undertaker and Embalmer. Head office : 181 Elgin Street, Carlton. Branches : 307 Victoria Street (near Errol Street), West Melbourne, and 11 Derby Street, Collingwood. Mr. Allison, the proprietor of the above well-known business, was born in West Melbourne in the year 1867, and educated in the district, finishing at the Carlton College. He then entered the business house of his father, the late Mr. Henry Allison, who in 1854 established the undertaking business in Victoria. There he went through every department of the business, acquiring a large experience, and qualifying himself to take over the management, in 1888, of the Carlton branch. Mr. Allison then entered into the study of embalming, as set forth in various American magazines, but his first practical lesson in the art was acquired under Professor Rivers, of the U.S., America, who lectured and demonstrated on the subject, holding classes for the purpose in Melbourne. The custom of embalming dead bodies, which may be traced back to the early days of the Egyptians, is a very necessary one as applied to modern Australia, where the climate necessitates the burial of persons within so short a time after death, and Professor Rivers' system was so complete that by the inducement of Mr. Allison, who was his first pupil in Victoria, several other undertakers also took up the study of the subject. In cases where it is necessary to remove the body from one State to another, or to send it to a foreign country for burial, the system is invaluable, not only from a hygienic point of view, inasmuch as the process of embalming prevents any possible chance of infection, but when the coffin of an embalmed body is opened weeks, or even months, after death the friends and relatives are privileged to behold the face of their dear one as it was in life, and thus all painful and repulsive ideas associated with death and corruption are removed. The custom is a usual one in America, the bodies of nearly every person who dies being embalmed, and in Australia, thanks to the enterprise and active exertions of Mr. Allison, it is gradually winning its way, so much so that it is rather the exception nowadays to find an undertaking firm of any repute without its embalmer. Mr. Allison resides on the premises in Elgin Street, so that clients may be (image of Mr. T. H. Allison. by Johnstone. O'Shannessy and Co.) assured of having their wishes carried out under his personal supervision. He acts himself as conductor on all occasions, and, with his well-trained staff of assistants, in conjunction with hearses and carriages of the most modern and up-to-date style, he is prepared to carry into immediate effect arrangements for all funerals entrusted to him, both large and small. He is the possessor of numerous testimonials from clients for the very able manner in which he has conducted a large number of both private and public interments. Mr. Allison is a member of the Victorian Master Undertakers Association, past president of the Victorian Embalmers Association, member of a great number of friendly societies, and a life member of the North Melbourne branch of the Australian Natives Association. JOHN ALLISON, Undertaker and Embalmer, 94 Simpson's Road, Richmond ; 225 Sydney Road, Brunswick ; and 67 Cardigan Place, South Melbourne. This well-known business was established in 1865 by Mr. John Allison, who was born in London in the year 1844, and educated at the British School, Camberwell, England. He is a son of Mr. Thos. Allison, who was for forty years in business as an undertaker in Camberwell, and was brought up to the trade in his father's establishment. At the age of eighteen, having gained a thorough knowledge of every branch of the business, he considered that it might be applied to better advantage in the colonies, and accordingly, in 1862, came out to Victoria. After three years colonial experience in West Melbourne with his brothers, Mr. Allison started on his own account as an undertaker in South Melbourne. This was in 1865, and he carried on this business and worked up an extensive connection until 1881, when he opened at and made Simpson's Road his headquarters, with an extra branch in Sydney. Road. Mr. Allison has built all his own hearses and coaches, a branch of the business which he combined with the supplying to country undertakers of all the necessary adjuncts of the trade, such as coaches, hearses, coffins, coffin furnishings, etc. Latterly he has given up the coach-building branch of his business, at the instigation of the Coach-building Association, but still supplies country customers with furnishings, etc. Mr. Allison is well known as a funeral director, and from the number of testimonials in his possession it is evident that he has carried out all arrangements to the entire satisfaction of his clients. His plant is an extensive one, and, with a well-trained staff of employees, Mr. Allison is prepared to execute any order in town or country in first-class style at the shortest notice. Mr. Allison is a member of all the benefit associations, and takes an active part in all movements connected with several of the most important. He is also greatly interested in sport of every description, and is an enthusiast in shooting, this being his favourite pastime, and when time admits may be found taking a few days' holiday in the country. He married a daughter of Captain John McMillan, master mariner, a very old colonist, and has a family of four sons and one daughter. Three of his sons assist him in his business, and his daughter Amy, now married, is highly accomplished in elocution, painting, and music.

Moonee Valley Thematic Environmental History: 187

Birth and death
There are no cemeteries in Moonee Valley but the community has been well served by undertakers. Joseph Allison and Alfred Allison both established businesses in the area in the late nineteenth century. Joseph Allison's main premises were in Errol Street, North Melbourne but he also had a branch office firstly at 10 Puckle Street, Moonee Ponds (in 1890), then at Mt Alexander Road, Ascot Vale. 523 At the same time Alfred Allison, whose main business was located in West Melbourne, had branch offices in Racecourse Road, Newmarket and also in Mt Alexander Road next to the 'Cycling Club'. 524 No doubt the Allisons were related, but the businesses were run as separate entities and in competition with each other' (cites 523 'North Melbourne Advertiser', 21

Local Government Area:

Heritage Type:

Memorial Artwork, Window

Description:

Subject

The Ascension Pentecost

Inscription

Pray for Lieutenant Andrew Christopher Fogarty -....

Description & History

Few stained glass soldier memorials are to be found in Catholic churches and this is possibly the most significant and largest example to be seen in Victoria. The window was placed in St. Mary's Star of the Sea by the family and friends of Lieutenant Chris Fogarty and occupied the five lights of the south transept with the Ascension of Christ in the three central main lights, flanked by images of St. John and St. Mary. The lower panels were filled with the scene of the Holy Spirit Descending at Pentecost and the image of Christ in Glory filled the main tracery oculus. Chris Fogarty's late father, Mr. Thomas Fogarty, was twice Mayor of North Melbourne. His brother, medical officer Major Joseph P. Fogarty MC, OBE, survived the war.

Lieutenant Andrew Christopher Fogarty, was born on 28 January 1885, fourth son to Thomas and Cecilia Fogarty. Chris was educated at St. Patrick's College, Ballarat before studying medicine for two years, at Ormond College, University of Melbourne. History

During the priesthood of the Very Rev. Henry England, St. Mary's became a separate parish in 1872, when it was already becoming obvious that the old accommodation was inadequate. There was no presbytery and a small existing structure on the west of the reserve, had served as both school and a place of worship since 1854. The new presbytery was built by 1873 and ten years later a church to the design of Tappin, Gilbert and Denehy, was begun, the foundation stone being laid by Archbishop Goold. Unfortunately the construction came to a halt in 1884 when funds ran out. Dean England died in 1888 and his successor, the Rev. Patrick Aylward could see that the existing plans did not cater for the rapidly increasing Catholic population of North Melbourne. In 1891 the church was redesigned and recommenced from the design of architect Edgar J. Henderson and the supervision of Phillip Kennedy. By 1900, the present church, Melbourne's largest parish church, was completed, including the installation of the organ and opened on 18th February, 1900 by Cardinal Moran. The blackwood cased organ is the oldest surviving of the pipe organs built by George Fincham of Richmond.

Description/Notable Features

Described as French Gothic, the church has not yet reached completion, the proposed 61 metre spire and bell tower having not been placed on the asymmetrically placed corner tower. Barrabool Hills sandstone is the major wall material with contrasting New Zealand Oamaru limestone dressing, the roof is slated whilst red Aberdeen polished granite is used in door and window surrounds. Internally, Swedish granite pillars on marble bases with Malmsbury basalt as the plinths, are used, in parallel with the all marble transept piers and the Pyrenean rose marbles of the side chapels. Timber (Kauri) groined arches, springing from hammer beam trusses in the ceiling obtain significance as uncommon replication of Gothic stone vaulting (Refer to lesser timber groining at the former Methodist Church, Hesse Street, Queenscliff), whilst the floor is of blackwood, as were the original seats. Numerous traceried coloured and Muranese glass windows light the clerestory and nave ends. Traditionally, cruciform planned, with nave and aisles, the other unrealised aspects of the design include the absence of pinnacles at the corner buttresses. Integrity - Generally original, except for the perimeter fence and proposed church grounds, the fence was of a gently scalloped profile, spade (or similar) head, timber picket, and the grounds envisaged included partieres set in gravel or asphalted grounds, now purely the latter. However these are of minor importance compared to the scale of the church.

Statement of Significance

Comparable with St. Lukes, North Fitzroy (1879-81) ; Scots

Church, Melbourne (1873-4); St. Ignatius, Richmond; Uniting Church, Williamstown; St. Mary's and St. Georges, Geelong; this uncompleted church must be considered of lesser significance given the massive base created for the spire and the consequent compositional imbalance now existing. However, the richness and extent of the interior, with its timber vaulting and multitudinous stone types and being completed, provide the major importance of this church; of regional significance externally and State wide importance internally. Historically, the relative size of the church represents the high percentage of Irish in the area.

'THE ACCIDENT AT THE POST OFFICE. TO THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS.

Sir,-After the numerous accidents which have lately occurred on the gold fields having fatal results, and the public attention which has been directed to accidents of this description, I cannot be at all surprised at the feeling that would arise in many persons' minds when it was known that one of the men, named Charles Henslem, engaged in painting the upper portion of one of the rooms of the General Post-office had lost his life by falling from the scaffold; but it is scarcely a sufficient justification for such a misrepresentation of facts as appears in the account given by your evening contemporary, which states that the rope which supported the part of the scaffolding he was working upon gave way, implying of necessity that the rope and scaffolding used were insufficient for the purpose-a direct misrepresentation of facts. It further states there is some feeling existing amongst the Post-office people against Mr. Stedeford, the contractor, &c. The greater part of the work requiring the use of scaffolding is completed, and, I fully believe to the satisfaction of the officials of the department. The whole of the work has been carried on under the supervision of a clerk of works appointed by the Public Works department, and while not for one moment attempting to shift or thrust responsibility on his shoulders, the staging and all connected with it has been under his supervision, and remarks were freely made at the time the scaffold was erected by many persons competent to judge that it was more than sufficient for the purpose required. The unfortunate man met his death not from the scaffolding ropes giving way, but through the rope by which he was lowering one of the planks to a lower portion of the building catching his foot, particulars of which will be fully disclosed at the inquest. The latter portion of the report to which I refer is simply of the highly sensational description that that paper delights to use to sport with the feelings of its readers, and while no person can more sincerely regret this fatal accident, I could not allow the imputations intended to be cast upon me to remain unanswered.

I am., &c.,

'JOHN STEDEFORD.

An old colonist and veteran justice of the peace, died at his residence, Loch-St., St. Kilda, on Tuesday, Councillor John Stedeford.

Deceased had not been in good health for some time, and took to his bed about six weeks ago. He was one of St. Kilda's oldest councillors, and represented that municipality on the Tramway Trust, of which at one time he was chairman. He was born at Bishop-Auckland, County of Durham, England, in 1842, and arrived in Melbourne in 1852. He was familiar with the early history of the State, both as regarded Melbourne and the Bendigo districts. Cr. Stedeford owned considerable house property in the city and suburbs, including several tenements in Queensberry-St., North Melbourne. Deceased was 71 years of age at his death. The interment took place in the St. Kilda Cemetery at 3 p.m., on Wednesday.'

'Death of Cr J. Stedeford, LONG PUBLIC CAREER. An early colonist in the person of St Kilda, died at his residence, "Annerly," Loch street, on Tuesday morning. Some weeks ago the deceased gentleman applied for three months leave of absence from his council duties, remarking at the time that during his lengthy career in the council (24 years) he had never previously applied for such lengthy leave. That he was not in good health at the time was proved by the fact that he was since confined to his bed. The cause of death was bronchial pneumonia. Cr Stedeford was 71 years of age, and leaves a grown up family of one son and four daughters. Arriving in Victoria in the year 1852, deceased joined in the general rush to the gold fields, and after spending some time at Bendigo with varying luck he returned to Melbourne, where he carried on the business of a contractor. Included in the more important works he carried out was a contract for glazing at the Law Courts in Lonsdale street. Councillor Stedeford was prominently known as liquidator in connection with the Metropolitan Bank, which had suffered from the banking crisis. In the carrying out of the duties entrusted to him Councillor Stedeford was eminently successful. During his career in the council he occupied the position of Mayor. He did valuable work for the rate payers, and he always had a thorough grip of municipal matters of local and metropolitan concern. His advice was always highly valued by his colleagues. His quickness in forming an opinion on subjects that came up for discussion was always apparent, and in this way he had the serviceable knack of leading off in discussions, and thus paving the way for rightful decisions being arrived at. That he will be missed from the

include intact shop front; post supported shop verandah.
Statement of Significance
Architecturally, a well composed and near original group, for corner shops and a hillside site, which possess some of the rare elements of commercial architecture (shop fronts and verandahs), a distinctive upper fenestration and a major role in a valuable streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, linked with John Stedeford whose other remarkable rows in Queensberry Street mark him as a prolific builder of conservative, but tasteful architecture in the area, also occupying a prominent commercial site with long tenure tenants, lending each shop with a personality and distinct use pattern: of high local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Consider replacement of shop fronts and verandah to existing details; repaint in typical or original colours; use lower level signage, as guidelines; record details of 285 shop front for restoration data; re-zone to local business to ensure preservation in use and form. Shop fronts

Other Comments Integrity - shop fronts replaced on verandahs have been removed from 281-5 and replaced with a cantilever on 283. Streetscape - A prominent and valuable contribution to a streetscape which repeats

'The Mayor of St. Kilda, Councillor John Stedeford who now occupies the position of chairman to the Tramway Trust, was congratulated at the local council meeting on Monday last on his election to the post. The same position was previously held by existing-councillor Jennings, who was the prime mover in getting the tramway to the beach converted from horse into cable trams.'

'JOHN STEDEFORD.

An old colonist and veteran justice of the peace, died at his residence, Loch-St., St. Kilda, on Tuesday, Councillor John Stedeford.

Deceased had not been in good health for some time, and took to his bed about six weeks ago. He was one of St. Kilda's oldest councillors, and represented that municipality on the Tramway Trust, of which at one time he was chairman. He was born at Bishop-Auckland, County of Durham, England, in 1842, and arrived in Melbourne in 1852. He was familiar with the early history of the State, both as regarded Melbourne and the Bendigo districts. Cr. Stedeford owned considerable house property in the city and suburbs, including several tenements in Queensberry-St., North Melbourne. Deceased was 71 years of age at his death. The interment took place in the St. Kilda Cemetery at 3 p.m., on Wednesday.'

'Death of Cr J. Stedeford,

LONG PUBLIC CAREER. An early colonist in the person of St Kilda, died at his residence, "Annerly," Loch street, on Tuesday morning. Some weeks ago the deceased gentleman applied for three months leave of absence from his council duties, remarking at the time that during his lengthy career in the council (24 years) he had never previously applied for such lengthy leave. That he was not in good health at the time was proved by the fact that he was since confined to his bed. The cause of death was bronchial pneumonia. Cr Stedeford was 71 years of age, and leaves a grown up family of one son and four daughters. Arriving in Victoria in the year 1852, deceased joined in the general rush to the gold fields, and after spending some time at Bendigo with varying luck he returned to Melbourne, where he carried on the business of a contractor. Included in the more important works he carried out was a contract for glazing at the Law Courts in Lonsdale street. Councillor Stedeford was prominently known as liquidator in connection with the Metropolitan Bank, which had suffered from the banking crisis. In the carrying out of the duties entrusted to him Councillor Stedeford was eminently successful. During his career in the council he occupied the position of Mayor. He did valuable work for the rate payers, and he always had a thorough grip of municipal matters of local and metropolitan concern. His advice was always highly valued by his colleagues. His quickness in forming an opinion on subjects that came up for discussion was always apparent, and in this way he had the serviceable knack of leading off in discussions, and thus paving the way for rightful decisions being arrived at. That he will be missed from the council goes without saying, and no one regrets his demise, on account of the warm feelings of personal friend ship that existed between them, more than his municipal colleagues. For many years Cr Stedeford occupied a seat on the Melbourne Tramway Trust, and was for twelve years chairman. Members of the Trust have placed on record the valuable services rendered by the deceased gentleman, and have decided to forward a letter of condolence to the family. For 40 years Councillor Stedeford was a Justice of the Peace. He was chair man of the Bench at the sittings of the local Court on Fridays, and here again his keen discernment, strict impartiality and general knowledge of Court work was recognised and appreciated alike by his magisterial colleagues, the legal profession and litigants. Honorary Justices and representatives of the legal profession have expressed themselves in terms of sincere regret at the demise of so valued a member of the Bench as councillor Stedeford undoubtedly proved himself. By the death of Councillor Stedeford, the community loses a gentleman of probity and special worth, one whose standing in the financial and commercial world was a tribute to his marked ability and uprightness of character. Much of the work he has done will long remain, so far as his memory is concerned, as monuments of his zeal and industry. His family have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in their bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, the remains being interred in the family vault at the St. Kilda cemetery. There was a large and representative attendance. The pall bearers were—The Mayor of St. Kilda ((Criterion A) O'Donnell), Sir Henry Weedon, Mr Jno. N. Browne (Town Clerk), Cr Jacoby, Dr Lowe, and Messrs Arnold, Benson, and Hamilton. Amongst others present were Crs Barnet, Love and Sculthorpe, and Mr Fred. Chamberlain chief municipal clerk. A large number of floral tributes were forwarded. The burial service was read by the Rev. Mr Pennicott, of Christ Church. St. Kilda. The coffin was a handsome heavy oak one, with silver mountings, and contained the inscription, " Cr John Stedeford, J P." The mortuary arrangements were in the efficient hands of Messrs W. G. Apps and Sons.'

`THE ACCIDENT AT THE POST OFFICE.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS.

Sir,-After the numerous accidents which have lately occurred on the gold fields having fatal results, and the public attention which has been directed to accidents of this description, I cannot be at all surprised at the feeling that would arise in many persons' minds when it was known that one of the men, named Charles Henslem, engaged in painting the upper portion of one of the rooms of the General Post-office had lost his life by falling from the scaffold; but it is scarcely a sufficient justification for such a misrepresentation of facts as appears in the account given by your evening contemporary, which states that the rope which supported the part of the scaffolding he was working upon gave way, implying of necessity that the rope and scaffolding used were insufficient for the purpose-a direct misrepresentation of facts. It further states there is some feeling existing amongst the Post-office people against Mr. Stedeford, the contractor, &c. The greater part of the work requiring the use of scaffolding is completed, and, I fully believe to the satisfaction of the officials of the department. The whole of the work has been carried on under the supervision of a clerk of works appointed by the Public Works department, and while not for one moment attempting to shift or thrust responsibility on his shoulders, the staging and all connected with it has been under his supervision, and remarks were freely made at the time the scaffold was erected by many persons competent to judge that it was more than sufficient for the purpose required. The unfortunate man met his death not from the scaffolding ropes giving way, but through the rope by which he was lowering one of the planks to a lower portion of the building catching his foot, particulars of which will be fully disclosed at the inquest. The latter portion of the report to which I refer is simply of the highly sensational description that that paper delights to use to sport with the feelings of its readers, and while no person can more sincerely regret this fatal accident, I could not allow the imputations intended to be cast upon me to remain unanswered.

I am., &c.,

JOHN STEDEFORD, Contractor.

`MR JOHN STEDEFORD of St Kilda, in the latest- of -his celebrated epistles, states 'that' daily conversations with prominent citizens and ratepayers in various districts have convinced him that there is a general feeling against the proposed expenditure on railways to the Northern suburbs. He trusts that Parliament, "free from influences which manifestly sway some members of the railway committee," will refuse to undertake the expenditure. There are many people so cruel as to think that JOHN STEDEFORD himself is not altogether free from the influences of the nature he refers to. It has been shown that STEDEFORD'S interests are by no means alien to those of the Tram way Company, even although a certain large parcel of shares are not in. his own name... '

Significance

Architecturally, a well composed and near original group, for corner shops and a hillside site, which possess some of the rare elements of commercial architecture (shop fronts and verandahs), a distinctive upper fenestration and a major role in a valuable streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, linked with John Stedeford whose other remarkable rows in Queensberry Street mark him as a prolific builder of conservative, but tasteful architecture in the area, also occupying a prominent commercial site with long tenure tenants, lending each shop with a personality and distinct use pattern: of high local importance.

Recommendations

Consider replacement of shop fronts and verandah to existing details; repaint in typical or original colours; use lower level signage, as guidelines; record details of 285 shop front for restoration data; re-zone to local business to ensure preservation in use and form.

`THE ACCIDENT AT THE POST OFFICE.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS.

Sir,-After the numerous accidents which have lately occurred on the gold fields having fatal results, and the public attention which has been directed to accidents of this description, I cannot be at all surprised at the feeling that would arise in many persons' minds when it was known that one of the men, named Charles Henslem, engaged in painting the upper portion of one of the rooms of the General Post-office had lost his life by falling from the scaffold; but it is scarcely a sufficient justification for such a misrepresentation of facts as appears in the account given by your evening contemporary, which states that the rope which supported the part of the scaffolding he was working upon gave way, implying of necessity that the rope and scaffolding used were insufficient for the purpose—a direct misrepresentation of facts. It further states there is some feeling existing amongst the Post-office people against Mr. Stedeford, the contractor, &c. The greater part of the work requiring the use of scaffolding is completed, and, I fully believe to the satisfaction of the officials of the department. The whole of the work has been carried on under the supervision of a clerk of works appointed by the Public Works department, and while not for one moment attempting to shift or thrust responsibility on his shoulders, the staging and all connected with it has been under his supervision, and remarks were freely made at the time the scaffold was erected by many persons competent to judge that it was more than sufficient for the purpose required. The unfortunate man met his death not from the scaffolding ropes giving way, but through the rope by which he was lowering one of the planks to a lower portion of the building catching his foot, particulars of which will be fully disclosed at the inquest. The latter portion of the report to which I refer is simply of the highly sensational description that that paper delights to use to sport with the feelings of its readers, and while no person can more sincerely regret this fatal accident, I could not allow the imputations intended to be cast upon me to remain unanswered.

I am, &c.,

JOHN STEDEFORD, Contractor.

'MR JOHN STEDEFORD of St Kilda, in the latest- of -his celebrated epistles, states 'that' daily conversations with prominent citizens and ratepayers in various districts have convinced him that there is a general feeling against the proposed expenditure on railways to the Northern suburbs. He trusts that Parliament, "free from influences which manifestly sway some members of the railway committee," will refuse to undertake the expenditure. There are many people so cruel as to think that JOHN STEDEFORD himself is not altogether free from the influences of the nature he refers to. It has been shown that STEDEFORD'S interests are by no means alien to those of the Tram way Company, even although a certain large parcel of shares are not in. his own name... '

'JOHN STEDEFORD.

An old colonist and veteran justice of the peace, died at his residence, Loch-St., St. Kilda, on Tuesday, Councillor John Stedeford.

Deceased had not been in good health for some time, and took to his bed about six weeks ago. He was one of St. Kilda's oldest councillors, and represented that municipality on the Tramway Trust, of which at one time he was chairman. He was born at Bishop-Auckland, County of Durham, England, in 1842, and arrived in Melbourne in 1852. He was familiar with the early history of the State, both as regarded Melbourne and the Bendigo districts. Cr. Stedeford owned considerable house property in the city and suburbs, including several tenements in Queensberry-St., North Melbourne. Deceased was 71 years of age at his death. The interment took place in the St. Kilda Cemetery at 3 p.m., on Wednesday.'

'Death of Cr J. Stedeford,

LONG PUBLIC CAREER. An early colonist in the person of St Kilda, died at his residence, "Annerly," Loch street, on Tuesday morning. Some weeks ago the deceased gentleman applied for three months leave of absence from his council duties, remarking at the time that during his lengthy career in the council (24 years) he had never previously applied for such lengthy leave. That he was not in good health at the time was proved by the fact that he was since confined to his bed. The cause of death was bronchial pneumonia. Cr Stedeford was 71 years of age, and leaves a grown up family of one son and four daughters. Arriving in Victoria in the year 1852, deceased joined in the general rush to the gold fields, and after spending some time at Bendigo with varying luck he returned to Melbourne, where he carried on the business of a contractor. Included in the more important works he carried out was a contract for glazing at the Law Courts in Lonsdale street. Councillor Stedeford was prominently known as liquidator in connection with the Metropolitan Bank, which had suffered from the banking crisis. In the carrying out of the duties entrusted to him Councillor Stedeford was eminently successful. During his career in the council he occupied the position of Mayor. He did valuable work for the rate payers, and he always had a thorough grip of municipal matters of local and metropolitan concern. His advice was always highly valued by his colleagues. His quickness in forming an opinion on subjects that came up for discussion was always apparent, and in this way he had the serviceable knack of leading off in discussions, and thus paving the way for rightful decisions being arrived at. That he will be missed from the council goes without saying, and no one regrets his demise, on account of the warm feelings of personal friend ship that existed between them, more than his municipal colleagues. For many years Cr Stedeford occupied a seat on the Melbourne Tramway Trust, and was for twelve years chairman. Members of the Trust have placed on record the valuable services rendered by the deceased gentleman, and have decided to forward a letter of condolence to the family. For 40 years Councillor Stedeford was a Justice of the Peace. He was chair man of the Bench at the sittings of the local Court on Fridays, and here again his keen discernment, strict impartiality and general knowledge of Court work was recognised and appreciated alike by his magisterial colleagues, the legal profession and litigants. Honorary Justices and representatives of the legal profession have expressed themselves in terms of sincere regret at the demise of so valued a member of the Bench as councillor Stedeford undoubtedly proved himself. By the death of Councillor Stedeford, the community loses a gentleman of probity and special worth, one whose standing in the financial and commercial world was a tribute to his marked ability and uprightness of character. Much of the work he has done will long remain, so far as his memory is concerned, as monuments of his zeal and industry. His family have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in their bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, the remains being interred in the family vault at the St. Kilda cemetery. There was a large and representative attendance. The pall bearers were—The Mayor of St. Kilda ((Criterion A) O'Donnell), Sir Henry Weedon, Mr Jno. N. Browne (Town Clerk), Cr Jacoby, Dr Lowe, and Messrs Arnold, Benson, and Hamilton. Amongst others present were Crs Barnet, Love and Sculthorpe, and Mr Fred. Chamberlain chief municipal clerk. A large number of floral tributes were forwarded. The burial service was read by the Rev. Mr Pennicott, of Christ Church. St. Kilda. The coffin was a handsome heavy oak one, with silver mountings, and contained the inscription, " Cr John Stedeford, J P." The mortuary arrangements were in the efficient hands of Messrs W. G. Apps and Sons.'

The Hennessy Bros. building at 287-291 Victoria Street, West Melbourne, is of local aesthetic and historical interest. The building is demonstrative of inter-War commercial development in the area. On the Sydney road, Brunswick-about a couple of hundred yards from where the houses begin to thickly margin the street-is situated Hennessy's Royal Park Bread Factory. Its frontage is neat but unpretentious, and except that the window display is of the kind usually seen only in large city shops, there is nothing to attract special attention or distinguish it from the rest of the modest two story business premises which neighbour it closely. Yet here is carried on the most extensive and prosperous bakery business in the Australian colonies...Mr W. M. Hennessy purchased the business from his brother last August, Mr. D. V. `Proceedings were taken in the District Police Court yesterday against John Lightowler, butcher, Wellington-street, Collingwood, for exposing at his stall in the Eastern Market, on the 21st of last month, a quantity of unwholesome mutton, with the intention of selling it for human consumption. Mr. F. Stephen conducted the prosecution on behalf of the local board of health. The complaint was laid by Mr. George Donald, inspector of markets, who stated that on the night in question he found on defendant's stall a carcase of mutton, which, on account of its being lean and dropsical, and quite unfit for human food, he seized. Subsequently Mr. Donald and Mr. Cashmore, the meat inspector, made another visit to defendant's stall, and found a lorry standing close at hand with the carcasses of 35 slaughtered sheep, an inspection of which revealed this fact that the whole of them were also, dropsical. Five of these were seized, and the remainder were ordered from the market. The defendant himself stated that the meat belonged to him. Mr. Miller, who appeared for the defence, called several witnesses, from whose evidence it appeared that the carcasses had been sent to the defendant by a butcher at Footscray, named Durham, who quite recently was fined in the District Court for an offence exactly similar to that' with which the defendant was charged, and that the carcasses ordered from the market were taken back to Darham and used for boiling-down purposes. The defendant was fined £10 with £3 3s. Costs.'

`The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Friday 5 July 1878

'A case was heard by 'Mr. Call, P.M., and several J.P.'s, at the District Police Court yesterday, in which Hugh M'Monagle, a green-grocer, was summoned by Mr. George Donald, inspector of markets, for hawking without a licence. It was proved that the accused was selling potatoes in Berkeley-street, Carlton, on the 18th of last month. As it was his first offence, the inspector had expressed his willingness to withdraw the charge before entering court, if the defendant paid the usual dues and the expenses incurred in instituting the proceedings, but he had failed to do so. The defendant now assured the Bench that he would agree to and fulfil the complainant's conditions. Mr. Call said the case would be postponed for seven day-s, and if in that time the accused paid 20s. as costs, the charge would be dismissed, but if not, a fine of £5, with costs, would be imposed.'

`The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Tuesday 17 June 1879

revenue, by preventing the sale of goods outside of the market upon which the dues had not been paid, The defendants were John McLachlan, Jacob Wexell and Archibald Pebbles, and they were charged with selling potatoes on the Queen's Wharf. The' prosecutor failed to prove the charge against Pebbles, and it was dismissed; and that against Wexeli was withdrawn. It was proved that McLachlan had sold a quantity of potatoes on the wharf, and as he had -no defence the bench inflicted a fine of £5, with £2 2s. Costs.'

Samuel Donald was the owner of these shops and residences for over ten years after they were built in 1884-5. They were constructed on a site previously occupied by smaller shops owned by George Donald, a weights inspector who was presumably Samuel's father.

The lessees after 1885 included Frederick Maine an agent; Phillip Woolf who sold fancy goods; and Henry Opaz a tailor. It was George Donald who, however, applied for a permit to build, with Albert Park builder, James Lever, in July 1884 (

A pair of parapeted and unpainted stuccoed brick shops and residences with iron Corporation street verandahs and unusual arched parapet entablatures, astride balustraded parapets and flanked by orbs on piers. The serlian motif is again implied in the bayed window grouping: each opening possessing dog-toothing at the head and rebates, with brackets, at the reveals paired brackets at the side walls support the heavy parapet cornice. A shop front possessing the original ingo plan if not the fabric, survives at 293. Notable features include unpainted cement render; post supported shop verandah; elaborate/high standard design of cement rendered surfaces.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, similar to 279-85 in the use of the serlian fenestration and parapet, but quite Mannered in its use of ornament, particularly at the parapet entablature and around openings; similarly it is near original, possessing verandah and unpainted upper stucco work and is a major part of a streetscape: of high regional importance. (compare with 470-2). Historically, varied in its tenancy and not conspicuous in its siting within the commercial area, it remains of local interest, as a near original part of the commercial building stock minority in this dominantly residential area.

Recommended Alterations

Maintain unpainted stucco (and faded signage); rebuild shop front of 295 to typical or original details; repaint trim and verandah in original or typical colours; re-zone to local business. Shopfronts replaced - ingos LH/RH (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative)

Other Comments Integrity - Shop fronts have been replaced; that at 293 (c1910) being sympathetic.

Streetscape - Major element in this valuable commercial streetscape: most shops possessing serlian upper fenestration.

'The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Second North Melbourne Building Society was held at Collins-Street west last evening, Mr. Donald 'presiding. The secretary read the fourth annual report as follows:-"In presenting to the shareholders the fourth annual report of the Society's transactions, together with the audited statement of accounts, the committee have to congratulate them upon the satisfactory progress made during the past year. The profit realised up to the present date is £1,090 5s., which, added to the subscriptions paid in, shows the value of each share to be £14. John Laurens, J.P., and J. G. Allbeury; auditors, Messrs. C. Hall and W. B. New." The report and balance-sheet were unanimously adopted, and the retiring office-bearers mentioned in the report were re-elected.'

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Tuesday 11 July 1876

'Proceedings were taken in the District Police Court yesterday against John Lightowler, butcher, Wellington-street, Collingwood, for exposing at his stall in the Eastern Market, on the 21th of last month, a quantity of unwholesome mutton, with the intention of selling it for human consumption. Mr. F. Stephen conducted the prosecution on behalf of the local board of health. The complaint was laid by Mr. George Donald, inspector of markets, who stated that on the night in question he found on defendant's stall a carcass of mutton, which, on account of its being lean and dropsical, and quite unfit for human food, he seized. Subsequently Mr. Donald and Mr. Cashmore, the meat inspector, made another visit to defendant's stall, and found a lorry standing close at hand with the carcasses of 35 slaughtered sheep, an inspection of which revealed this fact that the whole of them were also, dropsical. Five of these were seized, and the remainder were ordered from the market. The defendant himself stated that the meat belonged to him. Mr. Miller, who appeared for the defence, called several witnesses, from whose evidence it appeared that the carcasses had been sent to the defendant by a butcher at Footscray, named Durham, who quite recently was fined in the District Court for an offence exactly similar to that' with which the defendant was charged, and that the carcasses ordered from the market were taken back to Darham and used for boiling-down purposes. The defendant was fined £10 with £3 3s. Costs.'

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Friday 5 July 1878

'A case was heard by 'Mr. Call, P.M., and several J.P.'s, at the District Police Court yesterday, in which Hugh M'Monagle, a green-grocer, was summoned by Mr. George Donald, inspector of markets, for hawking without a licence. It was proved that the accused was selling potatoes in Berkeley-street, Carlton, on the 18th of last month. As it was his first offence, the inspector had expressed his willingness to withdraw the charge before entering court, if the defendant paid the usual dues and the expenses incurred in instituting the proceedings, but he had failed to do so. The defendant now assured the Bench that he would agree to and fulfil the complainant's conditions. Mr. Call said the case would be postponed for seven day-s, and if in that time the accused paid 20s. as costs, the charge would be dismissed, but if not, a fine of £5, with costs, would be imposed.'

'The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Tuesday 17 June 1879

'The market inspector, George Donald, instituted a prosecution against three potato dealers in the District Court yesterday, with the view of protecting the city

revenue, by preventing the sale of goods outside of the market upon which the dues had not been paid, The defendants were John McLachlan, Jacob Wexell and Archibald Pebbles, and they were charged with selling potatoes on the Queen's Wharf. The prosecutor failed to prove the charge against Pebbles, and it was dismissed ; and that against Wexeli was withdrawn. It was proved that McLachlan had sold a quantity of potatoes on the wharf, and as he had -no defence the bench inflicted a fine of £5, with £2 2s. Costs.'

`THE ACCIDENT AT THE POST OFFICE.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS.

Sir,-After the numerous accidents which have lately occurred on the gold fields having fatal results, and the public attention which has been directed to accidents of this description, I cannot be at all surprised at the feeling that would arise in many persons' minds when it was known that one of the men, named Charles Henslem, engaged in painting the upper portion of one of the rooms of the General Post-office had lost his life by falling from the scaffold; but it is scarcely a sufficient justification for such a misrepresentation of facts as appears in the account given by your evening contemporary, which states that the rope which supported the part of the scaffolding he was working upon gave way, implying of necessity that the rope and scaffolding used were insufficient for the purpose—a direct misrepresentation of facts. It further states there is some feeling existing amongst the Post-office people against Mr. Stedeford, the contractor, &c. The greater part of the work requiring the use of scaffolding is completed, and, I fully believe to the satisfaction of the officials of the department. The whole of the work has been carried on under the supervision of a clerk of works appointed by the Public Works department, and while not for one moment attempting to shift or thrust responsibility on his shoulders, the staging and all connected with it has been under his supervision, and remarks were freely made at the time the scaffold was erected by many persons competent to judge that it was more than sufficient for the purpose required. The unfortunate man met his death not from the scaffolding ropes giving way, but through the rope by which he was lowering one of the planks to a lower portion of the building catching his foot, particulars of which will be fully disclosed at the inquest. The latter portion of the report to which I refer is simply of the highly sensational description that that paper delights to use to sport with the feelings of its readers, and while no person can more sincerely regret this fatal accident, I could not allow the imputations intended to be cast upon me to remain unanswered.

I am., &c.,
JOHN STEDEFORD, Contractor.

He trusts that Parliament, "free from influences which manifestly sway some members of the railway committee," will refuse to undertake the expenditure. There are many people so cruel as to think that JOHN STEDEFORD himself is not altogether free from the influences of the nature he refers to. 'JOHN STEDEFORD.

An old colonist and veteran justice of the peace, died at his residence, Loch-St., St. Kilda, on Tuesday, Councillor John Stedeford.

Deceased had not been in good health for some time, and took to his bed about six weeks ago. He was one of St. Kilda's oldest councillors, and represented that municipality on the Tramway Trust, of which at one time he was chairman. He was born at Bishop-Auckland, County of Durham, England, in 1842, and arrived in Melbourne in 1852. He was familiar with the early history of the State, both as regarded Melbourne and the Bendigo districts. Cr. Stedeford owned considerable house property in the city and suburbs, including several tenements in Queensberry-St., North Melbourne. Deceased was 71 years of age at his death. The interment took place in the St. Kilda Cemetery at 3 p.m., on Wednesday.'

'Malvern Standard' (Vic. : 1906 - 1931) Saturday 26 April 1913

'Death of Cr J. Stedeford,

LONG PUBLIC CAREER. An early colonist in the person of St Kilda, died at his residence, "Annerly," Loch street, on Tuesday morning. Some weeks ago the deceased gentleman applied for three months leave of absence from his council duties, remarking at the time that during his lengthy career in the council (24 years) he had never previously applied for such lengthy leave. That he was not in good health at the time was proved by the fact that he was since confined to his bed. The cause of death was bronchial pneumonia. Cr Stedeford was 71 years of age, and leaves a grown up family of one son and four daughters. Arriving in Victoria in the year 1852, deceased joined in the general rush to the gold fields, and after spending some time at Bendigo with varying luck he returned to Melbourne, where he carried on the business of a contractor. Included in the more important works he carried out was a contract for glazing at the Law Courts in Lonsdale street. Councillor Stedeford was prominently known as liquidator in connection with the Metropolitan Bank, which had suffered from the banking crisis. In the carrying out of the duties entrusted to him Councillor Stedeford was eminently successful. During his career in the council he occupied the position of Mayor. He did valuable work for the rate payers, and he always had a thorough grip of municipal matters of local and metropolitan concern. His advice was always highly valued by his colleagues. His quickness in forming an opinion on subjects that came up for discussion was always apparent, and in this way he had the serviceable knack of leading off in discussions, and thus paving the way for rightful decisions being arrived at. That he will be missed from the council goes without saying, and no one regrets his demise, on account of the warm feelings of personal friendship that existed between them, more than his municipal colleagues. For many years Cr Stedeford occupied a seat on the Melbourne Tramway Trust, and was for twelve years chairman. Members of the Trust have placed on record the valuable services rendered by the deceased gentleman, and have decided to forward a letter of condolence to the family. For 40 years Councillor Stedeford was a Justice of the Peace. He was chair man of the Bench at the sittings of the local Court on Fridays, and here again his keen discernment, strict impartiality and general knowledge of Court work was recognised and appreciated alike by his magisterial colleagues, the legal profession and litigants. Honorary Justices and representatives of the legal profession have expressed themselves in terms of sincere regret at the demise of so valued a member of the Bench as councillor Stedeford undoubtedly proved himself. By the death of Councillor Stedeford, the community loses a gentleman of probity and special worth, one whose standing in the financial and commercial world was a tribute to his marked ability and uprightness of character. Much of the work he has done will long remain, so far as his memory is concerned, as monuments of his zeal and industry. His family have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in their bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, the remains being interred in the family vault at the St. Kilda cemetery. There was a large and representative attendance. The pall bearers were—The Mayor of St. Kilda ((Criterion A) O'Donnell), Sir Henry Weedon, Mr Jno. N. Browne (Town Clerk), Cr Jacoby, Dr Lowe, and Messrs Arnold, Benson, and Hamilton. Amongst others present were Crs Barnet, Love and Sculthorpe, and Mr Fred. Chamberlain chief municipal clerk. A large number of floral tributes were forwarded. The burial service was read by the Rev. Mr Pennicott, of Christ Church. St. Kilda. The coffin was a handsome heavy oak one, with silver mountings, and contained the inscription, " Cr John Stedeford, J P." The mortuary arrangements were in the efficient hands of Messrs W. G. Apps and Sons.'

iron Corporation street verandahs as the row descends

the hill. A timber ingo shop front exists on 307. Notable features include intact shop front; post supported shop verandah.

Statement of Significance

SURVEYED PLACES

Architecturally, an extensive and near original, in general form, shop row with original above verandah facades, which contain a fenestration pattern in common with other shops in the block, thus enhancing the streetscape; picturesque stepping of the unusually complete verandahs make this one of the more true to period shop rows in the metropolitan area, although of a conservative design; of high regional importance. Historically, associated with the ubiquitous John Stedeford who by unified development, with subtle changes, has created two major streetscapes within the area (Queensberry Street) also, in their previous form, with Sadler who developed many West Melbourne sites. One tenant, the Finegan family of fruiterers in 305, remained there for a long period, but most tenants were transient: of regional importance.

Recommended Alterations

Replace verandah on 307; consider replacement of shop fronts on 297-305 to match 307; repaint in original or typical colours; rezone to Local Business. Verandah incomplete (inappropriate - reinstate original design) 297-305 shop front replaced - ingo's paired, as 307 (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) 307 - verandah gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments

Integrity - All shop fronts except 307 have been replaced; the street verandah of 307 has gone; the parapet may have possessed urns or orbs. Streetscape - A major part of a valuable commercial streetscape.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)History

Although the first two years of this row's life (1869-9) was under the management of J. Davidson (agent), it would seem that the first owner-builder was William Sadler, a local property developer. When John Stedeford (qv) acquired the buildings from Sadler in 1882, they were extended and taken over by Charles Brache who owned them for the next fifteen years at least. Two of the lessees were Benjamin Cohen, a watchmaker, and Thomas Allison, one of the well-known family of undertakers. (Refer 145 Errol Street, 217-21 Victoria Street and 465-83 Queensberry Street). Stedeford appears to have acted as owner-builder on this major renovation as evidenced by the application. 2

Description

Like Stedeford's 279-85 Victoria Street (qv), this extensive two-storey stuccoed brick row (6) possesses serlian fenestration, set between the pilasters which divide each shop and, in a duplex form, every two shops. The simple parapet cornice is stepped (every two shops) as are the iron Corporation street verandahs as the row descends the hill. A timber ingo shop front exists on 307. Notable features include intact shop front; post supported shop verandah.

Integrity - All shop fronts except 307 have been replaced; the street verandah of 307 has gone; the parapet may have possessed urns or orbs.

Streetscape - A major part of a valuable commercial streetscape.

Significance

Architecturally, an extensive and near original, in general form, shop row with original above verandah facades, which contain a fenestration pattern in common with other shops in the block, thus enhancing the streetscape; picturesque stepping of the unusually complete verandahs make this one of the more true to period shop rows in the metropolitan area, although of a conservative design; of high regional importance. Historically, associated with the ubiquitous John Stedeford who by unified development, with subtle changes, has created two major streetscapes within the area (Queensberry Street) also, in their previous form, with Sadler who developed many West Melbourne sites. One tenant, the Finegan family of fruiterers in 305, remained there for a long period, but most tenants were transient: of regional importance.

Recommendations

`THE ACCIDENT AT THE POST OFFICE.
 TO THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS.

Sir,-After the numerous accidents which have lately occurred on the gold fields having fatal results, and the public attention which has been directed to accidents of this description, I cannot be at all surprised at the feeling that would arise in many persons' minds when it was known that one of the men, named Charles Henslem, engaged in painting the upper portion of one of the rooms of the General Post-office had lost his life by falling from the scaffold; but it is scarcely a sufficient justification for such a misrepresentation of facts as appears in the account given by your evening contemporary, which states that the rope which supported the part of the scaffolding he was working upon gave way, implying of necessity that the rope and scaffolding used were insufficient for the purpose—a direct misrepresentation of facts. It further states there is some feeling existing amongst the Post-office people against Mr. Stedeford, the contractor, &c. The greater part of the work requiring the use of scaffolding is completed, and, I fully believe to the satisfaction of the officials of the department. The whole of the work has been carried on under the supervision of a clerk of works appointed by the Public Works department, and while not for one moment attempting to shift or thrust responsibility on his shoulders, the staging and all connected with it has been under his supervision, and remarks were freely made at the time the scaffold was erected by many persons competent to judge that it was more than sufficient for the purpose required. The unfortunate man met his death not from the scaffolding ropes giving way, but through the rope by which he was lowering one of the planks to a lower portion of the building catching his foot, particulars of which will be fully disclosed at the inquest. The latter portion of the report to which I refer is simply of the highly sensational description that that paper delights to use to sport with the feelings of its readers, and while no person can more sincerely regret this fatal accident, I could not allow the imputations intended to be cast upon me to remain unanswered.

I am, &c.,

JOHN STEDEFORD, Contractor.

'MR JOHN STEDEFORD of St Kilda, in the latest- of -his celebrated epistles, states 'that' daily conversations with prominent citizens and ratepayers in various districts have convinced him that there is a general feeling against the proposed expenditure on railways to the Northern suburbs. He trusts that Parliament, "free from influences which manifestly sway some members of the railway committee," will refuse to undertake the expenditure. There are many people so cruel as to think that JOHN STEDEFORD himself is not altogether free from the influences of the nature he refers to. It has been shown that STEDEFORD'S interests are by no means alien to those of the Tram way Company, even although a certain large parcel of shares are not in. his own name...'

'JOHN STEDEFORD.

An old colonist and veteran justice of the peace, died at his residence, Loch-St., St. Kilda, on Tuesday, Councillor John Stedeford.

Deceased had not been in good health for some time, and took to his bed about six weeks ago. He was one of St. Kilda's oldest councillors, and represented that municipality on the Tramway Trust, of which at one time he was chairman. He was born at Bishop-Auckland, County of Durham, England, in 1842, and arrived in Melbourne in 1852. He was familiar with the early history of the State, both as regarded Melbourne and the Bendigo districts. Cr. Stedeford owned considerable house property in the city and suburbs, including several tenements in Queensberry-St., North Melbourne. Deceased was 71 years of age at his death. The interment took place in the St. Kilda Cemetery at 3 p.m., on Wednesday.'

'Malvern Standard' (Vic. : 1906 - 1931) Saturday 26 April 1913

'Death of Cr J. Stedeford,

LONG PUBLIC CAREER. An early colonist in the person of St Kilda, died at his residence, "Annerly," Loch street, on Tuesday morning. Some weeks ago the deceased gentleman applied for three months leave of absence from his council duties, remarking at the time that during his lengthy career in the council (24 years) he had never previously applied for such lengthy leave. That he was not in good health at the time was proved by the fact that he was since confined to his bed. The cause of death was bronchial pneumonia. Cr Stedeford was 71 years of age, and leaves a grown up family of one son and four daughters. Arriving in Victoria in the year 1852, deceased joined in the general rush to the gold fields, and after spending some time at Bendigo with varying luck he returned to Melbourne, where he carried on the business of a contractor. Included in the more important works he carried out was a contract for glazing at the Law Courts in Lonsdale street. Councillor Stedeford was prominently known as liquidator in connection with the Metropolitan Bank, which had suffered from the banking crisis. In the carrying out of the duties entrusted to him Councillor Stedeford was eminently successful. During his career in the council he occupied the position of Mayor. He did valuable work for the rate payers, and he always had a thorough grip of municipal matters of local and metropolitan concern. His advice was always highly valued by his colleagues. His quickness in forming an opinion on subjects that came up for discussion was always apparent, and in this way he had the serviceable knack of leading off in discussions, and thus paving the way for rightful decisions being arrived at. That he will be missed from the council goes without saying, and no one regrets his demise, on account of the warm feelings of personal friendship that existed between them, more than his municipal colleagues. For many years Cr Stedeford occupied a seat on the Melbourne Tramway Trust, and was for twelve years chairman. Members of the Trust have placed on record the valuable services rendered by the deceased gentleman, and have decided to forward a letter of condolence to the family. For 40 years Councillor Stedeford was a Justice of the Peace. He was chair man of the Bench at the sittings of the local Court on Fridays, and here again his keen discernment, strict impartiality and general knowledge of Court work was recognised and appreciated alike by his magisterial colleagues, the legal profession and litigants. Honorary Justices and representatives of the legal profession have expressed themselves in terms of sincere regret at the demise of so valued a member of the Bench as councillor Stedeford undoubtedly proved himself. By the death of Councillor Stedeford, the community loses a gentleman of probity and special worth, one whose standing in the financial and commercial world was a tribute to his marked ability and uprightness of character. Much of the work he has done will long remain, so far as his memory is concerned, as monuments of his zeal and industry. His family have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in their bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, the remains being interred in the family vault at the St. Kilda cemetery. There was a large and representative attendance. The pall bearers were—The Mayor of St. Kilda ((Criterion A) O'Donnell), Sir Henry Weedon, Mr Jno. N. Browne (Town Clerk), Cr Jacoby, Dr Lowe, and Messrs Arnold, Benson, and Hamilton. Amongst others present were Crs Barnet, Love and Sculthorpe, and Mr Fred. Chamberlain chief municipal clerk. A large number of floral tributes were forwarded. The burial service was read by the Rev. Mr Pennicott, of Christ Church. St. Kilda. The coffin was a handsome heavy oak one, with silver mountings, and contained the inscription, " Cr John Stedeford, J P." The mortuary arrangements were in the efficient hands of Messrs W. G. Apps and Sons.'

'Mercury and Weekly Courier' (Vic. : 1878 - 1903) Thursday 3 December 1896

'MR JOHN STEDEFORD of St Kilda, in the latest-of -his celebrated epistles, states 'that' daily conversations with prominent citizens and ratepayers in various districts have convinced him that there is a general feeling against the proposed expenditure on railways to the Northern suburbs. He trusts that Parliament, "free from influences which manifestly sway some members of the railway committee," will refuse to undertake the expenditure. There are many people so cruel as to think that JOHN STEDEFORD himself is not altogether free from the influences of the nature he refers to. It has been shown that STEDEFORD'S interests are by no means alien to those of the Tram way Company, even although a certain large parcel of shares are not in. his own name... '

'The Mayor of St. Kilda, Councillor John Stedeford who now occupies the position of chairman to the Tramway Trust, was congratulated at the local council meeting on Monday last on his election to the post. The same position was previously held by existing-councillor Jennings, who was the prime mover in getting the tramway to the beach converted from horse into cable trams.'

'JOHN STEDEFORD.

An old colonist and veteran justice of the peace, died at his residence, Loch-St., St. Kilda, on Tuesday, Councillor John Stedeford.

Deceased had not been in good health for some time, and took to his bed about six weeks ago. He was one of St. Kilda's oldest councillors, and represented that municipality on the Tramway Trust, of which at one time he was chairman. He was born at Bishop-Auckland, County of Durham, England, in 1842, and arrived in Melbourne in 1852. He was familiar with the early history of the State, both as regarded Melbourne and the Bendigo districts. Cr. Stedeford owned considerable house property in the city and suburbs, including several tenements in Queensberry-St., North Melbourne. Deceased was 71 years of age at his death. The interment took place in the St. Kilda Cemetery at 3 p.m., on Wednesday.'

The Prahran Telegraph (Vic. : 1889 - 1930) Saturday 26 April 1913 also.

'Malvern Standard' (Vic. : 1906 - 1931) Saturday 26 April 1913

'Death of Cr J. Stedeford, LONG PUBLIC CAREER. An early colonist in the person of St Kilda, died at his residence, "Annerly," Loch street, on Tuesday morning. Some weeks ago the deceased gentleman applied for three months leave of absence from his council duties, remarking at the time that during his lengthy career in the council (24 years) he had never previously applied for such lengthy leave. That he was not in good health at the time was proved by the fact that he was since confined to his bed. The cause of death was bronchial pneumonia. Cr Stedeford was 71 years of age, and leaves a grown up family of one son and four daughters. Arriving in Victoria in the year 1852, deceased joined in the general rush to the gold fields, and after spending some time at Bendigo with varying luck he returned to Melbourne, where he carried on the business of a contractor. Included in the more important works he carried out was a contract for glazing at the Law Courts in Lonsdale street. Councillor Stedeford was prominently known as liquidator in connection with the Metropolitan Bank, which had suffered from the banking crisis. In the carrying out of the duties entrusted to him Councillor Stedeford was eminently successful. During his career in the council he occupied the position of Mayor. He did valuable work for the rate payers, and he always had a thorough grip of municipal matters of local and metropolitan concern. His advice was always highly valued by his colleagues. His quickness in forming an opinion on subjects that came up for discussion was always apparent, and in this way he had the serviceable knack of leading off in discussions, and thus paving the way for rightful decisions being arrived at. That he will be missed from the council goes without saying, and no one regrets his demise, on account of the warm feelings of personal friendship that existed between them, more than his municipal colleagues. For many years Cr Stedeford occupied a seat on the Melbourne Tramway Trust, and was for twelve years chairman. Members of the Trust have placed on record the valuable services rendered by the deceased gentleman, and have decided to forward a letter of condolence to the family. For 40 years Councillor Stedeford was a Justice of the Peace. He was chairman of the Bench at the sittings of the local Court on Fridays, and here again his keen discernment, strict impartiality and general knowledge of Court work was recognised and appreciated alike by his magisterial colleagues, the legal profession and litigants. Honorary Justices and representatives of the legal profession have expressed themselves in terms of sincere regret at the demise of so valued a member of the Bench as councillor Stedeford undoubtedly proved himself. By the death of Councillor Stedeford, the community loses a gentleman of probity and special worth, one whose standing in the financial and commercial world was a tribute to his marked ability and uprightness of character. Much of the work he has done will long remain, so far as his memory is concerned, as monuments of his zeal and industry. His family have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in their bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, the remains being interred in the family vault at the St. Kilda cemetery. There was a large and representative attendance. The pall bearers were—The Mayor of St. Kilda ((Criterion A) O'Donnell), Sir Henry Weedon, Mr Jno. N. Browne (Town Clerk), Cr Jacoby, Dr Lowe, and Messrs Arnold, Benson, and Hamilton. Amongst others present were Crs Barnett, Love and Sculthorpe, and Mr Fred. Chamberlain chief municipal clerk. A large number of floral tributes were forwarded. The burial service was read by the Rev. Mr Pennicott, of Christ Church. St. Kilda. The coffin was a handsome heavy oak one, with silver mountings, and contained the inscription, "Cr John Stedeford, J P." The mortuary arrangements were in the efficient hands of Messrs W. G. Apps and Sons.'

`A DARING OUTRAGE. MAN ATTACKED AT HOME.
Masked and Armed- Intruders.
Mr Bernard Conway a grocer, of 119 Victoria street West Melbourne, was the victim of a brutish and daring assault and robbery by two masked and armed men in Ins own house on Saturday afternoon After he had been working in the back yard Mr Conway entered the house and went up stairs He was going into the sitting room when two men, with black handkerchiefs over their faces and one with a revolver came out of his bedroom Ml Conway asked what they wanted, but the reply he received was a heavy blow on the side of the head The blow partly dazed Mr Conway and a short struggle followed One of the men caught Mr Conway by the throat and forced him hack on the bed where he was struck several times on the head, and rendered partly unconscious While the struggle was going on one of the men called to the other tie his legs and an unsuccessful attempt was made to do so with a handkerchief. Surprised with meeting with such resistance the men lost no time in getting off the premises Mr Conway called for help while being maltreated but his cries for assistance were unheeded as the only other occupant of the house was Mr Conway's invalid sister who was asleep and only woke in time to see the men running down stairs Mr Conway had four £1 notes in his trousers pocket and these were taken He had 5/- in silver and a watch and gold chain in his waistcoat pockets but these were overlooked Mr Conway reported the matter to the police and was subsequently treated by Dr Hughes for black eye and extensive e bruises on the left side of the face which was all quite black to the throat It is believed that the men entered at the side gate and as the doors of the house were not locked entry was an easy matter Mr Conway was in the habit of banking about every fortnight and only a day before took £35 to the bank. The offender» seem to have known that Mr Conway was in the habit of keeping money on the premises and the affair was evidently a deliberately planned one Detectives Commons und Ashton have the case in hand.'

Soon after this shop and residence was built in 1869 for Phillip Bevan the ironmonger, it was taken over by Patrick Conway, a grocer and provisions dealer, who remained there until 1881 when it passed into the hands of Bernard Conway, presumably his son. In 1900, Bernard Conway was still there, and today the building fulfils a grocery-allied role. Of note is that Bevan applied to construct 'a

Charles Straker had a long association with this hotel. In 1879, he purchased it from Frederick Stone, the first owner (1867) whose publican he had been for six years. At this time the hotel was enlarged, the rateable value increasing considerably. By 1890, the hotel was owned by the Colonial Bank, who may have been mortgagors of the property. The owner and licensee at the turn of the century was David O'Callaghan. The hotel valuation continued to increase during the 1880s-90s, doubling from Integrity Fair

Two, two-storeyed parapeted stuccoed brick wings, one facing Victoria Street, the other King Street. The latter is simply elevated with a central, gabled parapet entablature and upper decorated fenestration, shared in character by the Victoria Street wing, which has flat pediments and swagged friezes beneath. Cornice and string moulds delineate the horizontals and quoins terminate them as verticals: this wing appears to be the earlier. The Victoria Street wing is a highly decorated but traditional splayed-corner dentilated impost moulds, guilloche pattern string-moulds and gabled pediments with acroteria over doorways, together with barrel-top chimneys comprise most of the decoration. Crossed swords and three crowns illustrate the hotels name in a facade panel and on window glass. It is likely that this decorative facade was applied c1890, to a base form.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, (Victoria Street) a near original, richly and successfully decorated design, presumably applied to an old form much in the manner of the Railway Hotel, Ireland Street (qv), also a major streetscape element, terminating the main commercial area in Victoria Street south: of high regional importance. (King Street) An altered but simple part of this large complex: of local importance. Historically, the earliest commercial building in the two commercial blocks, between Howard and King Streets, in Victoria Street, West Melbourne and evocative of the typical 19th century corner hotel form; of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Restore parapet urns; repaint in typical or original colours; consider externally illuminated signs lettered as guidelines; consider restoration of openings on King Street Wing; re-zone to Local Business. Tiles; dado (inappropriate - reinstate original design) colours - ground level; (inappropriate - reinstate sympathetic alternative) signs - ground level (inappropriate - remove/reinstate sympathetic alternative) doors replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative)

Other Comments Integrity - Ground level openings on the King Street wing have been altered/blocked; parapet urns/orbs have been removed from parapet piers on the Victoria Street wing, dado tiles applied and various signs attached. Streetscape - The major and earliest part of a notable commercial streetscape.

'Benevolent Asylum (Kingston Centre) demolition 1911 Set in rolling green countryside 2 km north-west of the infant Melbourne township, the Benevolent Asylum was opened on 27 November 1851 to 'relieve the aged, infirm, disabled or destitute of all creeds and nations' in the town's early days. The asylum was built by the Victoria Benevolent Society, a group of philanthropic citizens determined to house the colony's 'deserving poor' in more dignified fashion than the dreaded workhouses of the new English Poor Law. In accordance with a pattern already established for the development of charities in Victoria, the government granted the land and provided funds to match private subscriptions to build the asylum.

The overwhelming influx of immigrants to Victoria in the early 1850s placed enormous demands on the asylum, which initially served as an immigrants' home, blind asylum, orphanage, lying-in hospital and lunatic asylum. However, as other institutions were established, it focused increasingly on housing the aged poor. The impressive three-storey Tudor-style building on 'Institution Hill', straddling North and West Melbourne, was extended four times in its first 20 years. In 1873 the society commenced negotiations with the Victorian Government about relocating from the overcrowded site, but with no result. The society responded by erecting more wards on the 10-acre (4 ha) site, reaching a capacity of 685 beds. The depression of the 1890s severely strained the resources of the asylum, 878 applicants being turned away in 1892. The asylum finally relocated to a 150-acre (60 ha) site at Cheltenham in 1911 and the old buildings fronting Curzon Street in North Melbourne were demolished. By then almost 15 000 people had been assisted by the society.

With the establishment of other asylums throughout rural Victoria, the Benevolent Asylum was renamed the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum in 1868. Now known as the Kingston Centre, it remains at Cheltenham but provides a vastly different aged care service from its 1850s forerunner.

'The Benevolent Asylum Site.

It was originally intended that the site of the Benevolent Asylum at North Melbourne, which will be vacant in a few months owing to the erection of a new institution at Cheltenham. And the demolition of the present building should be put on the market next month. However, the Hen. W. A. Watt, State Treasurer, says that the land must be submitted for sale, not as a simple block, but in conjunction with plans showing the various allotments, proposed streets and right-of-ways, etc. The preparation of this information for buyers will necessary occupy some time, so that the sale of the site will not take place as soon as anticipated.'

SALE BY AUCTION.

SURVEYED PLACES

Last Saturday, at 3 p.m., the former site of the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum. was put up for auction, it having been cut up into 53 residential allotments. There were a number of people on the ground. At the former hour, and the bidding was keen, and the prices obtained satisfactory. The land, originally about 10 acres, was reserved for the purposes of the asylum over 60 years ago, and when the institution was removed to Cheltenham some time ago, it became necessary to pass an enabling act through the State Assembly before it could be sold. Meanwhile the committee, which has expended over £100,000 on the new buildings, needed money, and the treasurer advanced £15,000 on the understanding that it would be refunded out of the proceeds of the sale of the land. Owing to excisions for a road and lanes, the area actually put up for sale was reduced to 8.1/2 acres, comprising 53 allotments. Eight of these are quarter-acre blocks, and the remainder are 40 feet by 120 feet. Victoria-St. has been extended through the land, the roadway being 99 feet wide and 666 feet long from Curzon to Abbotsford-sts.. A plantation has been formed in the centre of the roadway, having a width of 120 feet to the allotments on the north side and 173 feet to those on the south side. The sale was conducted by Messrs. Sydney C. Arnold & Co., in conjunction with Messrs. John Buchan. & Co... and when Mr. Arnold started operations in a large marquee on the ground, there were about 400 persons present. Liberal conditions were offered to buyers, terms being 10 per cent cash and 10 per cent in three months, and the balance extending over three years. No fewer than 47 of the allotments were sold, the prices ranging from £5/5/- to £12/10/- per foot, and a total sum of £18,643/5/9 was realised. The remaining six allotments in Miller St. will, it is expected, be sold privately shortly, and the total amount realised from the sale will be over £20,000. Victoria-St separates North-Melbourne from West Melbourne, and it was a singular fact that the competition was keenest for the land on the North Melbourne side, though it is not considered to be so good as that on the West Melbourne side. In Elm-St. the prices ran from £5/5/- to £6/12/6 per foot, but an allotment at the corner of Victoria and Curzon-sts.- brought £12/10/- per foot, and the average realised on those facing Victoria-St., north and south, was £8 per foot. The allotment on the corner of Curzon and Miller-sts. Brought £9/17/6 per foot, whilst lot 2 in Miller St. realised £7/15/- per foot, and others in the same street £7/10/- per foot. It was noted as a somewhat remarkable fact that the competition...was keenest for the flat land, and that prospective buyers were not so anxious to bid for, some of the highest land; whence a splendid view of the Bay and surrounding country can be obtained.

After the sale, there remained 5 blocks of the Miller-St. Frontage undisposed of and at the beginning of the week the auctioneers sold one of them privately at £7/10/- a foot, and there is every probability of the balance passing off in the near future in a similar fashion.'

'Old West Melbourne...

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir, — I "have been much interested in the letters about old identities of North Melbourne, and would like to hear of some of the old West Melbourne folk. In my day the Benevolent Asylum faced Curzon-street and was surrounded by spacious grounds, bounded by Curzon, Miller." Abbotsford and Elm streets. Victoria-street ended abruptly at the front gate and then continued on the other side at Abbotsford-street. I can still hear in memory the old asylum bell ringing in the evening, and see the old folk walking round the tree-sheltered grounds. I remember seeing the superintendent, with his bag and white top hat, letting himself in at a private gate in Abbotsford-street. We lived on a block almost every house on which was occupied by an old Scotch family. There were the Ramages, Simpsons, Robertsons, Flndlays, Bagleys, Swanstons, Alders, Watsons, Crystals, McBeans and others. The grocery store at the -comer of Lothian and Miller streets was kept by the O'Brien family, the butcher's shop near them by Swanby, and afterwards by Read. Other old families within half a mile included the Landers, Ingrams, Binyons, Dotts, Crockets, Youngs, Smiths, Overs, Modnetts, Selfs, Whiles, Irvines. The streets were lit by gas lamps. I remember the electric light being installed, also sewerage. Does anyone remember Cranky Fred the "bottle-oh," who used to go down on his knees and pray for the bad boys who stood and laughed. They would say "Pray, Fred," and down he would go. In those days West Melbourne was a quiet, select spot. Everyone seemed to know everyone else.—

Yours, &c., ANCIENT. Rupanyup, 11th September'

`Graham J Whitehead (web) The Melbourne Benevolent Asylum Comes to Cheltenham Article Cat. Historical Features
 Article Ref. 302

The beginnings of the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum were made before Victoria gained its independence from New South Wales in 1851. Councillor John Smith, of the City of Melbourne requested government officers in Sydney on June 1, 1848 to grant a site and the necessary finance to build an institution where the ill and destitute of Melbourne could be cared for. But it was not until 1850 that the foundation stone of the building to be erected in North Melbourne was laid by Superintendent La Trobe. Governor Fitzroy in Sydney granted the site together with a sum of £1000 on the understanding that an equal sum of money would be raised by public subscription. [1]

`The Argus' described the ten acre site in North Melbourne bound by Abbotsford, Elm, Curzon and Miller Streets as "...the most magnificent that could well be imagined, the view being not only most extensive, and beautiful in the extreme, but peculiarly eligible for a public building, from the fact of its commanding every entrance to the city, North, South, East and West, as well as forming a most prominent object of observation from the Bay. [2] Another contemporary report provides further insight into the nature of the site; "One of the problems encountered was that the Asylum was out in the bush and there was no firm thoroughfare of any kind leading to it. As it was mid winter, to save visitors from bogging or drowning, an avenue was buoyed at intervals one each side with rude torches fastened to poles secured in the ground and soldiers and every policeman that could be spared patrolled the bush track from the junction of the Queen and LaTrobe Streets between Flagstaff Hill and the Cemetery, to act as pilots for the carriages." [3]

It was architect Charles Laing who gained the commission to design an imposing public building while builders Charles Brown, Henry Brown and Samuel Ramsden were given the task of constructing it. Their initial tender was for £2850 although the cost of the finished building was £3272-19-6. [4]

The discovery of gold in Victoria brought an unprecedented influx of people who sought to make their fortune. Unfortunately large numbers failed, and many individuals becoming destitute and ill turned to the asylum for help. This placed great pressure on the available accommodation so, over a period of twenty years, a series of extensions were made to the original building. By 1865 the committee was renting adjoining premises to accommodate some of the inmates.

In 1875 the Superintendent and Secretary of the Benevolent Asylum, James McCutcheon, argued in the annual report that the city site was too limiting and was no longer appropriate because of its proximity to a crowded city where an outbreak of an epidemic would be dangerous for their old and feeble inmates. He wanted a government grant of land 100 to 200 acres in size in a location at least ten miles from the city and near a railway station. The new buildings he envisaged would be no more than two storeys high to facilitate movement and be designed to completely separate male and female inmates. McCutcheon saw the less convenient location an advantage in that access would be more difficult causing fewer applications for admittance. [5]

In 1880 a special appeal was launched to raise money claiming the Asylum was "filled to repletion with aged and infirm persons, many of them labouring under complicated diseases, and all fit and worthy objects for charitable sympathy; whilst every week numbers of gaunt, hungry and distressed persons, of both sexes, crowd the passages, and vainly implore admission." [6] It was at this time that a deputation met with the Premier requesting a land grant of 150 acres at Cheltenham. Although sympathetically heard by the Premier it was not for some years that the issue was addressed. [7]

In 1887 J E Thomas, the secretary to the Premier, wrote to the Asylum committee suggesting they might consider a site at Frankston for the building of a new refuge. He reported that the Lands Department believed a location on the railway line had several advantages including good climate, excellent soil and a splendid view. There were upwards of 3000 acres available and a portion, he wrote, could be granted to the committee for the construction of buildings and the development of flower gardens by the inmates. Flowers and shrubs grown there, as well as decorating the institution, could also be offered for sale. The Lands Department acknowledged that the Cheltenham site was suitable for present needs but believed that in a few years similar objections to those raised against the North Melbourne site would be received. Reservations were also expressed in the letter about the financial provisions for the new buildings. Estimates of building cost had not been obtained and reliable estimates of the value of the North Melbourne property and the amount of money likely to be realised from its sale were not known. [8]

When the details of the Premier's response, delivered through his secretary, were published in The Age newspaper the Rev Alfred Caffin, vicar of St Matthew's Church of England in Cheltenham, replied with surprise and indignation. "The Lands Department apparently can see much further into the future than the residents of this locality, who are anxious to have the new building erected in their midst. The Lands Department, without showing the imaginary grounds for objection that may be raised in the future, then generously offer a site at Frankston." Caffin goes on to point out that the features of the Frankston site equally apply to the proposed Cheltenham location, although he acknowledges the Frankston location might be a little grander of view. Caffin suggested that if the authorities were after a view then a site at Dromana would perhaps suit better. Cheltenham had the advantage of being closer to the city and had a permanent water source necessary for the production of flowers and shrubs. Perhaps, Caffin conjectures, the Lands Department is interested in one of the Frankston Brick Companies or some powerful outside influence has brought to bear its sway on the government. [9]

The Asylum committee thought the Frankston location was too far away but J M Smith saw the opportunity to take advantage of the government's offer. Given the enormous expense and great trouble that would be incurred in transferring the institution to another site he proposed to his colleagues that they should ask the government to endow the charity with the 3000 acres of land at Frankston. When the idea was challenged by several of his colleagues as being unrealistic he replied, "the Government don't know what to do with it. They have no use for it." [10] Mr Gillies, the Premier of Victoria, replied to the committee's communication indicating he was seeking the opinion of the Commissioner of Lands and Survey and would confer with him about the new location of the Asylum. [11]

The Royal Commission of 1890 in a progress report strongly recommended that the Asylum be established at Cheltenham at the earliest opportunity but again the Government failed to act. [12] It was the announcement of a magnificent legacy to the Asylum by Mr J Hingston who died in England on March 8, 1902 at the age of 75 that galvanised the various parties and organizations back into action. Amongst the bequests to friends, relatives and other institutions Hingston left about £25,000 to the Benevolent Asylum to be applied to rebuilding the institution on a ground floor plan only. He saw, as a member of the Asylum's committee, that the many floored and stair-cased building in North Melbourne very troublesome to the old and rheumatically patients. [12] With access to a new source of funds the issue of moving the asylum to a site further out in the country was once again raised.

The Rev Alfred Caffin immediately responded to the bequest by writing to the Brighton Southern Cross to stress the value of the Cheltenham site. He pointed out it was located about twelve miles from the City and about two miles from South Brighton, Highett and Cheltenham railway stations and was situated on a pretty ridge commanding views of the bay and the Dandenong ranges. In addition, it possessed an excellent spring of water and soil of a light and friable character highly valued by amateur gardeners. Should the institution wish to expand beyond the reserve of about one hundred acres there was vacant land outside the boundaries of the reserve and the whole site was accessible to visitors. [13]...

It was almost two years after the laying of the foundation stone (1909) that the transfer of patients from North Melbourne to Cheltenham began. The logistics for such an occasion given the distance, the condition of many patients and the available transport were immense. Added to this were the emotional feelings held by many patients leaving the gloomy but friendly environment they had known for many years, while others were looking forward to more pleasant accommodation 'by the sea'. Some were so old and feeble they took no interest in what was a momentous occasion in the history of the institution. [28]

According to the Age report, the asylum authorities expected some inmates to refuse to go to Cheltenham and instead seek shelter with friends, but there were few such cases. Most recognized the asylum provided them with security and contact with friends.

The move was completed in stages with the first group to leave being one hundred and twenty five inmates from the women's invalid wards. It took five hours to load the furniture vans and three days to move all the residents from their old North Melbourne home to Cheltenham. In total 513 were transferred and of that number 313 were bed ridden. [29] '

`Benevolent Asylum (Kingston Centre) demolition 1911

Set in rolling green countryside 2 km north-west of the infant Melbourne township, the Benevolent Asylum was opened on 27 November 1851 to 'relieve the aged, infirm, disabled or destitute of all creeds and nations' in the town's early days. The asylum was built by the Victoria Benevolent Society, a group of philanthropic citizens determined to house the colony's 'deserving poor' in more dignified fashion than the dreaded workhouses of the new English Poor Law. In accordance with a pattern already established for the development of charities in Victoria, the government granted the land and provided funds to match private subscriptions to build the asylum.

The overwhelming influx of immigrants to Victoria in the early 1850s placed enormous demands on the asylum, which initially served as an immigrants' home, blind asylum, orphanage, lying-in hospital and lunatic asylum. However, as other institutions were established, it focused increasingly on housing the aged poor. The impressive three-storey Tudor-style building on 'Institution Hill', straddling North and West Melbourne, was extended four times in its first 20 years. In 1873 the society commenced negotiations with the Victorian Government about relocating from the overcrowded site, but with no result. The society responded by erecting more wards on the 10-acre (4 ha) site, reaching a capacity of 685 beds. The depression of the 1890s severely strained the resources of the asylum, 878 applicants being turned away in 1892. The asylum finally relocated to a 150-acre (60 ha) site at Cheltenham in 1911 and the old buildings fronting Curzon Street in North Melbourne were demolished. By then almost 15 000 people had been assisted by the society.

With the establishment of other asylums throughout rural

'The Benevolent Asylum Site.

It was originally intended that the site of the Benevolent Asylum at North Melbourne, which will be vacant in a few months owing to the erection of a new institution at Cheltenham. And the demolition of the present building should be put on the market next month. However, the Hon. W. A. Watt, State Treasurer, says that the land must be submitted for sale, not as a simple block, but in conjunction with plans showing the various allotments, proposed streets and right-of-ways, etc. The preparation of this information for buyers will necessarily occupy some time, so that the sale of the site will not take place as soon as anticipated.'

'North Melbourne Courier and West Melbourne Advertiser' (Vic. : 1895 - 1913) Friday 28 February 1913

'BENEVOLENT ASYLUM SITE.

SALE BY AUCTION.

Last Saturday, at 3 p.m., the former site of the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum. was put up for auction, it having been cut up into 53 residential allotments. There were a number of people on the ground. At the former hour, and the bidding was keen, and the prices obtained satisfactory. The land, originally about 10 acres, was reserved for the purposes of the asylum over 60 years ago, and when the institution was removed to Cheltenham some time ago, it became necessary to pass an enabling act through the State Assembly before it could be sold. Meanwhile the committee, which has expended over .£100,000 on the new buildings, needed money, and the treasurer advanced £15,000 on the understanding that it would be refunded out of the proceeds of the sale of the land. Owing to excisions for a road and lanes, the area actually put up for sale was reduced to 8.1/2 acres, comprising 53 allotments. Eight of these are quarter-acre blocks, and the remainder are 40 feet by 120 feet. Victoria-St. has been extended through the land, the roadway being 99 feet wide and 666 feet long from Curzon to Abbotsford-sts.. A plantation has been formed in the centre of the roadway, having a width of 120 feet to the allotments on the north side and 173 feet to those on the south side. The sale was conducted by Messrs. Sydney C. Arnold & Co., in conjunction with Messrs. John Buchan. & Co... and when Mr. Arnold started operations in a large marquee on the ground, there were about 400 persons present. Liberal conditions were offered to buyers, terms being 10 per cent cash and 10per cent in three months, and the balance extending over three years. No fewer than 47 of the allotments were sold, the prices ranging from £5/5/- to.£12/10/- per foot, and a total sum of £18,643/5/9 was realised. The remaining six allotments in Miller St. will, it is expected, be sold privately shortly, and the total amount realised from the sale will be over £20,000. Victoria-St separates North-Melbourne from West Melbourne, and it was a singular fact that the competition was keenest for the land on the North Melbourne side, though it is not considered to be so good as that on the West Melbourne side. In Elm-St. the prices ran from £5/5/- to £6/12/6 per foot, but an allotment at the corner of Victoria and Curzon-sts.- brought £12/10/- per foot, and the average realised on those facing Victoria-St., north and south, was £8 per foot. The allotment on the corner of Curzon and Miller-sts. Brought £9/17/6 per foot, whilst lot 2 in Miller St. realised £7/15/- .per foot, and others in the same street £7/10/ per foot. It was noted as a somewhat remarkable fact that the competition...was keenest for the flat land, and .that prospective buyers were not so anxious to bid -for, some of the highest land; whence a splendid view of the Bay and surrounding country can be obtained. After the sale, there remained 5 blocks of the Miller-St. Frontage undisposed of and at the beginning of the week the auctioneers sold one of them privately at £7/10/- a foot, and there is every probability of the balance passing off in the near future in a similar fashion.'

'The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Saturday 15 September 1934 p 19 Article

'Old West Melbourne...

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir, — I "have been much interested in the letters about old identities of North Melbourne, and would like to hear of some of the old West Melbourne folk. In my day the Benevolent Asylum faced Curzon-street and .was surrounded by spacious grounds, bounded by Curzon, Miller." Abbotsford and Elm streets. Victoria-street ended abruptly at the front gate and then continued on the other side at Abbotsford-street. I can still hear in memory the old asylum bell ringing in the evening, and see the old folk walking round the tree-sheltered grounds. I remember seeing the superintendent, with his bag and white top hat, letting himself in at-a private gate in Abbotsford-street. We lived on a block almost every house on which was occupied by an old Scotch family. There were the Ramages, Simpsons, Robertsons, Flndlays, Bagleys, Swanstons, Alders, Watsons, Crystals, McBeans and others. The grocery store at the -corner of Lothian and Miller streets was kept by the O'Brien family, the butcher's shop near them by Swanby, and afterwards by Read. Other old families within half a mile included the Landers, Ingrams, Binyons, Dotts, Crockets, Youngs, Smiths, Overs, Modnetts, Sells, Whiles, Irvines. The streets were lit by gas lamps. I remember the electric light being installed, also sewerage. Does anyone remember Cranky Fred the "bottle-oh," who used to go down on his knees and pray for the bad boys who stood and laughed. They would say "Pray, Fred," and down he would go. In those days West Melbourne was a quiet, select spot. Everyone seemed to know everyone else.—

Yours, &c., ANCIENT. Rupanyup, 11th September'

'Benevolent Asylum (Kingston Centre) demolition 1911
Set in rolling green countryside 2 km north-west of the infant Melbourne township, the Benevolent Asylum was opened on 27 November 1851 to 'relieve the aged, infirm, disabled or destitute of all creeds and nations' in the town's early days. The asylum was built by the Victoria Benevolent Society, a group of philanthropic citizens determined to house the colony's 'deserving poor' in more dignified fashion than the dreaded workhouses of the new English Poor Law. In accordance with a pattern already established for the development of charities in Victoria, the government granted the land and provided funds to match private subscriptions to build the asylum. The overwhelming influx of immigrants to Victoria in the early 1850s placed enormous demands on the asylum, which initially served as an immigrants' home, blind asylum, orphanage, lying-in hospital and lunatic asylum. However, as other institutions were established, it focused increasingly on housing the aged poor. The impressive three-storey Tudor-style building on 'Institution Hill', straddling North and West Melbourne, was extended four times in its first 20 years. In 1873 the society commenced negotiations with the Victorian Government about relocating from the overcrowded site, but with no result. The society responded by erecting more wards on the 10-acre (4 ha) site, reaching a capacity of 685 beds. The depression of the 1890s severely strained the resources of the asylum, 878 applicants being turned away in 1892. The asylum finally relocated to a 150-acre (60 ha) site at Cheltenham in 1911 and the old buildings fronting Curzon Street in North Melbourne were demolished. By then almost 15 000 people had been assisted by the society.

With the establishment of other asylums throughout rural Victoria, the Benevolent Asylum was renamed the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum in 1868. Now known as the Kingston Centre, it remains at Cheltenham but provides a vastly different aged care service from its 1850s forerunner.

'The Benevolent Asylum Site.

It was originally intended that the site of the Benevolent Asylum at North Melbourne, which will be vacant in a few months owing to the erection of a new institution at Cheltenham. And the demolition of the present building should be put on the market next month. However, the Hon. W. A. Watt, State Treasurer, says that the land must be submitted for sale, not as a simple block, but in conjunction with plans showing the various allotments, proposed streets and right-of-ways, etc. The preparation of this- information for buyers will necessary occupy some time, so that the sale of the site will not take place as soon as anticipated.'

'North Melbourne Courier and West Melbourne Advertiser' (Vic. : 1895 - 1913) Friday 28 February 1913

'BENEVOLENT ASYLUM SITE.

SALE BY AUCTION.

Last Saturday, at 3 p.m., the former site .of the Melbourne Benevolent Asylum. was :put up for auction, it having been cut up into 53 residential allotments. There were a number of people on the ground. At the former hour, and the bidding was keen, and the prices obtained satisfactory. The land, originally about 10 acres, was reserved for the purposes of the asylum over 60 years ago, and when the institution was removed to Cheltenham some time ago, it became necessary to pass an enabling act through the State Assembly before it could be sold. Meanwhile the committee, which has expended over .£100,000 on the new buildings, needed money, and the treasurer advanced £15,000 on the understeering that it would be refunded out of the proceeds of the sale of the land. Owing to excisions for a road and lanes, the area actually put up for sale was reduced to 8.1/2 acres, comprising 53 allotments. Eight of these are quarter-acre blocks, and the remainder are 40 feet by 120 feet. Victoria-St. has been extended through the land, the roadway being 99 feet wide and 666 feet long from Curzon to Abbotsford-sts.. A plantation has been formed in the centre of the roadway, having a width of 120 feet to the allotments on the north side and 173 feet to those on the south side. The sale was conducted by Messrs. Sydney C. Arnold & Co., in conjunction with Messrs. John Buchan. & Co... and when ,Mr. Arnold started operations in a large marquee on the ground, there were about 400 persons present. Liberal conditions were offered to buyers, terms being 10 per cent cash and 10per cent in three months, and the balance extending over three years. No fewer than 47 of the allotments were sold, the prices ranging from £5/5/- to.£12/10/- per foot, and a total sum of £18,643/5/9 was realised. The remaining six allotments in Miller St. will, it is expected, be sold privately shortly, and the total amount realised from the sale will be over £20,000. Victoria-St separates North-Melbourne from West Melbourne, and it was a singular fact that the competition was keenest for the land on the North Melbourne side, though it is not considered to be so good as that on the West Melbourne side. In Elm-St. the prices ran from £5/5/- to £6/12/6 per foot, but an allotment at the corner of Victoria and Curzon-sts.- brought £12/10-per foot, and the average realised on those facing Victoria-St., north and south, was £8 per foot. The allotment on the corner of Curzon and Miller-sts. Brought £9/17/6 per foot, whilst lot 2 in Miller St. realised £7/15]- .per foot, and others in the same street £7/10/ per foot. It was noted as a somewhat remarkable fact that the competition...was keenest for the flat land, and .that prospective buyers were not so anxious to bid -for, some of the highest land; whence a splendid view of the Bay and surrounding country can be obtained.

After the sale, there remained 5 blocks of the Miller-St. Frontage undisposed of and at the beginning of the week the auctioneers sold one of them privately at £7/10/- a foot, and there is every probability of the balance passing off in the near future in a similar fashion.'

'Old West Melbourne...

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir, — I "have been much interested In the letters about old identities of North Melbourne, and would like to hear of some of the old West Melbourne folk. In my day the Benevolent Asylum faced Curzon-street and .was surrounded by spacious grounds, bounded by Curzon, Miller." Abbotsford and Elm streets. Victoria-street ended abruptly at the front gate and then continued on the other side at Abbotsford-street. I can still hear in memory the old asylum bell ringing in the evening, and see the old folk walking round the tree-sheltered grounds. I remember seeing the superintendent, with his bag and white top hat, letting himself in at-a private gate in Abbotsford-street. We lived on a block almost every house on which was occupied by an old Scotch family. There were the Ramages, Simpsons, Robertsons, Flndlays, Bagleys, Swanstons, Alders, Watsons, Crystals, McBeans and others. The grocery store at the -corner of Lothian and Miller streets was kept by the O'Brien family, the butcher's shop near them by Swanby, and afterwards by Read. Other old families within half a mile included the Landers, Ingrams, Binyons, Dotts, Crockets, Youngs, Smiths, Overs, Modnetts, Sells, Whiles, Irvines. The streets were lit by gas lamps. I remember the electric light being installed, also sewerage. Does anyone remember Cranky Fred the "bottle-oh," who used to go down on his knees and pray for the bad boys who stood and laughed. They would say "Pray, Fred," and down he would go. In those days West Melbourne was a quiet, select spot. Everyone seemed to know everyone else.—

Yours, &c., ANCIENT. Rupanyup, 11th September'

467, 469 Victoria Street

History

No. 469 Victoria Street, the older of these two houses was built in 1860, for John Christopher Bagley, a clerk in the Public Lands Department and the grantee of the allotment. He continued to live there for over twenty years, when George Bagley, a Queensberry Street chemist and presumably his son, assumed ownership. The Swanson family had a continuous association with 467 Victoria Street from Thomas Swanson, its first owner in 1868 to George Swanson, a plumber of Spencer Street, who was there until after 1895. George Swanson applied as the owner and builder to construct 467 in April 1868: described as a 6 room house.

Description

469 is a rock face basalt masonry house of two-storeys with a parapeted roof line and remnants of a two-level timber verandah. 467 is a hipped iron roof, two-storey rock face, quoined basalt masonry building also with remnants of a verandah. Notable features include verandah roof and structure - one level concave verandah.

Integrity - Both have been altered extensively with new parapets (467) and openings (469) and their verandahs rebuilt.

Streetscape - Two of an early group of houses. 457-467 from the 1860-70s, which share siting characteristics, scale and details.

Significance

Architecturally, so altered as to no longer represent their period, these two early houses are nevertheless, constructed of basalt which is a relatively uncommon wall material in the metropolis: of regional interest. Historically, both houses were owner-occupied for long periods one by a prominent local chemist, the other typically allied with the renowned builder family name of Swanson: of local importance.

Victorian Heritage Database

`Glendale and Cleverdon House, at 106 and 108 Riversdale Road, Hawthorn, are of local historical and architectural significance as a prominently sited, substantial and relatively externally intact example of two semi-detached Victorian Italianate residences. While the typology of the residences (two substantial semi-detached residences designed to appear as a large detached residence) is unusual in Boroondara, the houses otherwise adopt generally typical Victorian Italianate forms and detailing. The building's prominent and elevated siting and substantial size give it considerable presence in the streetscape. The properties are of historical interest for their association with William Cleverdon, who served as Mayor of Hawthorn between 1876-77 and 1879-80. '

Victorian Heritage Database

`Glendale and Cleverdon House, at 106 and 108 Riversdale Road, Hawthorn, are of local historical and architectural significance as a prominently sited, substantial and relatively externally intact example of two semi-detached Victorian Italianate residences. While the typology of the residences (two substantial semi-detached residences designed to appear as a large detached residence) is unusual in Boroondara, the houses otherwise adopt generally typical Victorian Italianate forms and detailing. The building's prominent and elevated siting and substantial size give it considerable presence in the streetscape. The properties are of historical interest for their association with William Cleverdon, who served as Mayor of Hawthorn between 1876-77 and 1879-80. '

`The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Tuesday 29

February 1876

`Mr. James Noonan, J.P., was sued in the County Court yesterday by John Mooney, formerly a clerk to Messrs. O'Grady, Leggatt, and Noonan, for £19 damages for false imprisonment. The plaintiff's code was that he lived at a house in Capel-street with a woman named Miss Duggan, and that on the 11th January, while he was in the cellar stacking wood, he heard a noise in the house, and on going up stairs to the bedroom found the defendant behaving improperly with Miss Duggan, He then gave defendant a "clout," and turned him out of the house, the defendant leaving behind him a watch, a pair of spectacles, and a pocket-book. The defendant, after leaving the house, went to the West Melbourne police station, and from what he there stated the police went to Mooney's house, and took him into custody for felony in keeping Noonan's watch, spectacles, and book. For the defence it was stated that on the day in question defendant had been to a funeral, and was going to his home in West Melbourne, carrying his coat and vest on his arm, when Miss Duggan, seeing him pass by her house, asked him to come in and see what poverty she had been reduced to by Mooney. He went into the house, and into, the bedroom, and the plaintiff then, apparently from a previously concocted scheme to extort money, rushed into the room and charged him with improper conduct, and kept his watch and the other things. Two other points of the defence were that Mooney was a man of bad character, and was discharged from O'Grady, Leggatt, and Noonan's employment, and that Noonan had not given him in charge at all for felony, but had asked the police only to recover his property from Mooney, When the case was taken before the city magistrates Mooney was only charged with assault, and fined 20s.; but it was shown that the charge on the sheet had been in the first instance robbery, then assault with intent to extort money, and afterwards assault. The fact of the watch and other things being left in Mooney's house was accounted for by defendant stating that Mooney took them from him and would not give them up unless he gave him £100, or found him a billet for two years. The jury of four who heard the case returned a verdict for plaintiff-damages £5.'

Builder Not Assessed

First Owner

Although the first owner (1870-1) was a contractor, James Noonan, he did not build the house. After him there was quite a succession of owners e.g. Frederick Scales, John Hughes, Henry Maxwell; the latter two leasing the house to John Forrester and Charles Hirst, a Spencer Street chemist. Builder, James H. Sutherland constructed the house.

Integrity Fair

Condition Fair

Original Building Type

Description/Notable Features

An eccentrically detailed, asymmetrically planned and double-fronted house of stuccoed brick, with an arched porch, gabled and hipped iron-clad roof and architraved openings. Unusual aspects include the Romanesque inspired fretted pendant eaves valence, a corbelled eaves support from the window bay and a pentagonal panel above the bay. Chimney shafts are panelled. Notable features include eaves/gable detail; elaborate/high standard design of cement rendered surfaces.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, highly unusual if irregular combination of elements and details which is basically original and from an early date: of high regional importance. Historically, a mixed tenancy, associated primarily with Noonan (qv), the local builder-developer: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Rebuild original fence or typically, an arrow-head timber picket fence; repaint in original or typical colours; remove paint from footings; consider zoning provisions to preserve residential use and form, i.e. re-zone to Special Residential 2. Colours (sympathetic - no recommendation) door glazed (sympathetic - reinstate original design) fence replaced; gable finial gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative)stone painted - plinth (inappropriate - remove by approved

Other Comments

Integrity - The gable finial and front fence have been removed, the basalt footings painted and the door altered in detail; plumbing is intrusive.

Streetscape - One of a varied group of old houses in Walsh Street, intermixed with new development (62, 46-8, 42).

Paul Montford was born in London in 1868. He studied at London's prestigious Royal Academy of Arts and immigrated to Australia in 1921. Montford was responsible for a number of commissions in Melbourne, including the statues of Justice George Higinbotham and poet Adam Lindsay Gordon. For the latter he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Society of British Sculptors.

Montford's The Court Favourite captures the action of a lithe youth playing with his boisterous pet lion cub. The cub crouches low and tugs fiercely at the youth's cloak. In his right hand the youth clasps a decorated baton, its handpiece a carved elephant head.

Councillor Baron Marks donated the statue to the Melbourne City Council. He had initially donated £200 towards statuary for Melbourne's parks and gardens, but when The Court Favourite became available, he increased his donation to £400. The work was unveiled at a formal ceremony on 6 February 1930.'

What is significant?

Flagstaff Hill including the Flagstaff Gardens occupies an elevated position to the north west of Melbourne's CBD. Consisting of 7.7 hectares, it was originally called Burial Hill by the European settlers and was used as Melbourne's first burial ground in the 1830s. Later used as a signal station between 1840 and 1857, and then as a magnetic and meteorological observatory under Professor George von Neumayer between 1857 and 1862, the hill is a significant archaeological site. In 1862 the site was established as a public garden. Designed in an informal gardenesque style by the Deputy Surveyor General Clement Hodgkinson in 1865, and later redesigned by John Guilfoyle in the 1890s, the garden contained numerous trees of scientific and aesthetic importance, many of which remain today. The current appearance of the gardens reflects changes made between the 1890s and the 1920s although the original pathways are still evident as are several of the original tree plantings. Although the character of the gardens has changed since the 1860s, the current appearance reflects a diverse cultural landscape that is rich in horticultural, historic and social meaning.

How is it significant?

Flagstaff Gardens and Flagstaff Hill are of aesthetic, archaeological, historical, scientific (horticultural) and social significance to the State of Victoria

Why is it significant?

Flagstaff Hill is of historic and scientific importance. Between 1836 and 1837, it was the site of Melbourne's first burial ground. Seven burials took place there and as there is no evidence that the bodies were exhumed the site probably has archaeological potential. Between 1840 and 1857 the site was used as a signal station with flagstaff. It was used to communicate with a similar station at Point Gellibrand at Williamstown. Flags flown from the flagstaff indicated shipping arrivals in the Bay and shipping lists were posted on a bulletin board near the station building. Accordingly the hill was a regular gathering place for Melburnians of all classes. The flagstaff and signal station became redundant following the introduction of the telegraph, however the site was then used as a meteorological and magnetic observatory between 1857 and 1862. Established under the supervision of Bavarian scientist George von Neumayer, the observatory played a significant part in the development of scientific knowledge in the colony. The footings of the signal station and the observatory buildings probably still exist and would be a significant archaeological deposit.

The Flagstaff Gardens is of scientific (horticultural) and aesthetic significance. Established as a public garden in 1862, the Flagstaff Gardens was designed in the gardenesque style in 1865 by Assistant Commissioner for Crown Lands and Survey, Clement Hodgkinson. Unlike the Fitzroy Gardens, also designed by Hodgkinson, the Flagstaff Gardens was a more informal style. Its path layout was determined in part by the site's topography but also by the location of the Victoria Market in the north-east corner. Some of the original 1860s path layout remains but the current layout reflects changes made between the 1890s and the 1920s. The central path from the main entrance in William Street to the crown of the Flagstaff Hill has disappeared but most of the path that originally crossed the gardens from the corner of King and Latrobe Streets towards the Victoria Market still exists. None of the original statues exist but there is a sundial from the nineteenth century, albeit whose base was reconstructed in 1947, and a sculpture, The Court Favourite, from the 1930s.

There are many fine individual specimens of trees in the gardens including a Holm Oak (Quercus ilex), located on the south side of the William Street entrance, from the first stage of planting in the nineteenth century and which is amongst the largest of the species known in Victoria. There are also significant specimens from the twentieth century including a Maidenhair tree (Ginkgo biloba) and a Chinese Parasol tree (Firmiana simplex). The Ginkgo biloba is one of the State's finest and largest, and is growing in a prominent position in the garden of the caretakers cottage. The only larger and older Ginkgo biloba in Victoria is in the Geelong Botanic Gardens, which was planted in 1859. The Firmiana simplex is rare in Victoria and this tree is also the largest known in the State. As well there are a variety of significant specimen trees including elms, oaks,

SURVEYED PLACES

Moreton bay figs, Canary Island pines and River Red Gums. The Corynocarpus laevigatus is uncommon in Victoria and this tree is the largest known specimen in the State. The two Italian cypresses (Cupressus sempervirens) have important landscape and historical significance due to their association with Melbourne's first cemetery. These trees were commonly planted in cemeteries due to their symbolism.

The Flagstaff Gardens is of landscape and horticultural significance due to the avenues of elms (Ulmus procera and U. x hollandica) lining the pathways through the Gardens and elm rows along the north, north east and southern perimeter of the gardens. The elms are common landscape element in all of Melbourne's nineteenth century gardens and boulevards. The trees are numerous and have grown to a large size and are an important feature of the urban character and provide outstanding autumn colour. Melbourne now has some of the finest European elms in the world and these are of increasing international significance as Dutch Elm Disease has killed most of these species in the northern hemisphere. The deciduous elms, poplars and English oaks contrast dramatically with the evergreen conifers, eucalypts, Moreton Bay Figs and palms to provide an outstanding landscape. The two Eucalyptus cladocalyx (Sugar Gum) in the north eastern corner have grown to a great size and are an important landmark in the landscape.

Flagstaff Hill also has social significance as place of recreation and celebration. The existence of the various monuments on the crest of the hill reflects the importance of the site in the popular imagination. In addition, the hill was a natural gathering place in the early years of European settlement because of the views it offered over the Bay. Furthermore, with separation from New South Wales in 1850, the hill was a focus of celebrations with bonfires being lit and other festivities taking place there. In 1950 a monument was built to commemorate these original celebrations.

The Flagstaff Gardens has been the less respectable component in the city's collection of public parks. Accordingly its social significance is different from the Carlton, Fitzroy or Treasury Gardens. In the 1930s it was observed that if the Fitzroy Gardens was the city's drawing room then Flagstaff Gardens was its kitchen. Earlier in the century it was also perceived to be the most notorious of the public parks as a site for illicit activities. This informality and diversity of public behaviour has distinguished it from other city gardens and also is an important part of its character today. The bowling club, playground and tennis courts contribute to its continuing recreational and informal character. To an extent its character has also been defined by its position on the west side of the city close to the Victoria Market, working class residential areas, industry and Yarra wharves.

What is significant?

Flagstaff Hill including the Flagstaff Gardens occupies an elevated position to the north west of Melbourne's CBD. Consisting of 7.7 hectares, it was originally called Burial Hill by the European settlers and was used as Melbourne's first burial ground in the 1830s. Later used as a signal station between 1840 and 1857, and then as a magnetic and meteorological observatory under Professor George von Neumayer between 1857 and 1862, the hill is a significant archaeological site. In 1862 the site was established as a public garden. Designed in an informal gardenesque style by the Deputy Surveyor General Clement Hodgkinson in 1865, and later redesigned by John Guilfoyle in the 1890s, the garden contained numerous trees of scientific and aesthetic importance, many of which remain today. The current appearance of the gardens reflects changes made between the 1890s and the 1920s although the original pathways are still evident as are several of the original tree plantings. Although the character of the gardens has changed since the 1860s, the current appearance reflects a diverse cultural landscape that is rich in horticultural, historic and social meaning.

How is it significant?

Flagstaff Gardens and Flagstaff Hill are of aesthetic, archaeological, historical, scientific (horticultural) and social significance to the State of Victoria

Why is it significant?

Flagstaff Hill is of historic and scientific importance. Between 1836 and 1837, it was the site of Melbourne's first burial ground. Seven burials took place there and as there is no evidence that the bodies were exhumed the site probably has archaeological potential. Between 1840 and 1857 the site was used as a signal station with flagstaff. It was used to communicate with a similar station at Point Gellibrand at Williamstown. Flags flown from the flagstaff indicated shipping arrivals in the Bay and shipping lists were posted on a bulletin board near the station building. Accordingly the hill was a regular gathering place for Melburnians of all classes. The flagstaff and signal station became redundant following the introduction of the telegraph, however the site was then used as a meteorological and magnetic observatory between 1857 and 1862. Established under the supervision of Bavarian scientist George von Neumayer, the observatory played a significant part in the development of scientific knowledge in the colony. The footings of the signal station and the observatory buildings probably still exist and would be a significant archaeological deposit.

The Flagstaff Gardens is of scientific (horticultural) and aesthetic significance. Established as a public garden in 1862, the Flagstaff Gardens was designed in the gardenesque style in 1865 by Assistant Commissioner for Crown Lands and Survey, Clement Hodgkinson. Unlike the Fitzroy Gardens, also designed by Hodgkinson, the Flagstaff Gardens was a more informal style. Its path layout was determined in part by the site's topography but also by the location of the Victoria Market in the north-east corner. Some of the original 1860s path layout remains but the current layout reflects changes made between the 1890s and the 1920s. The central path from the main entrance in William Street to the crown of the Flagstaff Hill has disappeared but most of the path that originally crossed the gardens from the corner of King and Latrobe Streets towards the Victoria Market still exists. None of the original statues exist but there is a sundial from the nineteenth century, albeit whose base was reconstructed in 1947, and a sculpture, The Court Favourite, from the 1930s.

There are many fine individual specimens of trees in the gardens including a Holm Oak (Quercus ilex), located on the south side of the William Street entrance, from the first stage of planting in the nineteenth century and which is amongst the largest of the species known in Victoria. There are also significant specimens from the twentieth century including a Maidenhair tree (Ginkgo biloba) and a Chinese Parasol tree (Firmiana simplex). The Ginkgo biloba is one of the State's finest and largest, and is growing in a prominent position in the garden of the caretakers cottage. The only larger and older Ginkgo biloba in Victoria is in the Geelong Botanic Gardens, which was planted in 1859. The Firmiana simplex is rare in Victoria and this tree is also the largest known in the State. As well there are a variety of significant specimen trees including elms, oaks, Moreton bay figs, Canary Island pines and River Red Gums. The Corynocarpus laevigatus is uncommon in Victoria and this tree is the largest known specimen in the State. The two Italian cypresses (Cupressus sempervirens) have important landscape and historical significance due to their association with Melbourne's first cemetery. These trees were commonly planted in cemeteries due to their symbolism.

The Flagstaff Gardens is of landscape and horticultural significance due to the avenues of elms (Ulmus procera and U. x hollandica) lining the pathways through the Gardens and elm rows along the north, north east and southern perimeter of the gardens. The elms are common landscape element in all of Melbourne's nineteenth century gardens and boulevards. The trees are numerous and have grown to a large size and are an important feature of the urban character and provide outstanding autumn colour. Melbourne now has some of the finest European elms in the world and these are of increasing international significance as Dutch Elm Disease has killed most of these species in the northern hemisphere. The deciduous elms, poplars and English oaks contrast dramatically with the evergreen conifers, eucalypts, Moreton Bay Figs and palms to provide an outstanding landscape. The two Eucalyptus cladocalyx (Sugar Gum) in the north eastern corner have grown to a great size and are an important landmark in the landscape.

Flagstaff Hill also has social significance as place of recreation and celebration. The existence of the various monuments on the crest of the hill reflects the importance of the site in the popular imagination. In addition, the hill was a natural gathering place in the early years of European settlement because of the views it offered over the Bay. Furthermore, with separation from New South Wales in 1850, the hill was a focus of celebrations with bonfires being lit and other festivities taking place there. In 1950 a monument was built to commemorate these original celebrations.

The Flagstaff Gardens has been the less respectable component in the city's collection of public parks.

SURVEYED PLACES

Accordingly its social significance is different from the Carlton, Fitzroy or Treasury Gardens. In the 1930s it was observed that if the Fitzroy Gardens was the city's drawing room then Flagstaff Gardens was its kitchen. Earlier in the century it was also perceived to be the most notorious of the public parks as a site for illicit activities. This informality and diversity of public behaviour has distinguished it from other city gardens and also is an important part of its character today. The bowling club, playground and tennis courts contribute to its continuing recreational and informal character. To an extent its character has also been defined by its position on the west side of the city close to the Victoria Market, working class residential areas, industry and Yarra wharves.

`Samuel Craven
 Sandstone obelisk
 1871
 Flagstaff Gardens
 Flagstaff Gardens once had special significance for the people of Melbourne. It was a place of hope and a place of sorrow. Early colonists could sight incoming ships from this high point, which brought tangible links with the old country; and known as Burial Hill, it was also the city's first burial ground. This latter role is reflected well in the Gothic architecture of the memorial, for as if wrested from an English church it is a reminder that this final resting place for an estimated six early settlers is a long way from 'home'.
 The rapid growth of Melbourne made the site unsuitable as a cemetery, so a new burial ground was established at what is now Queen Victoria Market. Save for two wattle trees, the graves of the first buried went unmarked until 1871. The Department of Public Works then commissioned a sandstone obelisk by Samuel Craven for this purpose, its pointed uppermost section now missing.
 The memorial was erected in April 1871, and at the time of its unveiling a large cross was cut into the lawns surrounding it. Its inscription reads: 'Erected in 1871/to the memory of/ some of the earliest of the pioneers of this colony/ whose remains were interred near this spot'.

'SUICIDE IN WEST MELBOURNE.

Alfred Hardham, 69, committed suicide yesterday morning by hanging himself in the stable of the Royal Standard Hotel, at the corner of "Walsh and "William streets, West Melbourne. Mrs. Hardham, wife of the deceased, is the licensee of the hotel. She states that she last saw her husband alive at 11.15 on Thursday night, when she retired to rest, leaving him in charge of the bar She did not hear him come to bed, but about 6.15 a.m. yesterday she heard him dress himself and leave the bedroom without speaking to her. At 7 o'clock she arose, and descending to the ground floor, began to look for her husband finding him nowhere about the house, she .went into the yard, and in the open shed which is used as a stable she was horrified to see him hanging from one of the rafters with his feet about a foot from the ground. The police were communicated with and Constable R. Warren hastened to the spot and cut the body down. A medical man had meanwhile been sent for, and Warren loosened the rope from Hardham's neck in the hope that there might be a possibility of his being restored. On the "arrival of Dr. Embley, of Latrobe-street, however, life was pronounced to be extinct. Mrs. Hardham states that her husband had been worried by business trouble of late, and that is the only cause she can assign for his taking his life. The body was removed to the Morgue, where an inquest will be held.

'North Melbourne Courier and West Melbourne Advertiser' 1 January 1897

'Dr. Youl, the City Coroner, held an inquest last Monday on the body of Alfred Hardham, husband of the licensee of the Royal Standard Hotel, William-street, West Melbourne, who committed suicide by hanging himself in a shed on Christmas Day. It appeared that the deceased was happy in his domestic relations, but was worried over business matters. Constable Warren said that he spoke to Mr. Hardham on Christmas Eve, and he seemed quite rational. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased hanged himself on the 25th inst., but there was no evidence to show the state of his mind at the time.'

The accused were Colin Stewart and Harry Adams, who swore in the licensing case that the bar door of the hotel was closed when the police entered. This statement was denied by Constables Hallett, Berriman, Burns and Piggott, who stated that the door was open, and that the latter was standing in the doorway at the time. Mr. Gaunson, for the defence, contended that the constables had made a mistake, and that at the particular time Hallett, Berriman and Burns entered Piggott was not in the doorway and the door was shut. After hearing the evidence Mr. Panton decided that it did not warrant a committal, and the accused were discharged. Inspector Connolly prosecuted.'

At North Melbourne court yesterday, James B. Douglas, Royal Standard Hotel, William-street, West Melbourne, was charged with Sunday trading...(police) entered the bar parlor, where they saw two men. They also saw three men in another parlor, and, hearing voices in another room, knocked at the door, but Mrs. Dodds, manageress, said, "That is a woman's bedroom. You can't go in there." Witness said, "I hear a man talking," on which Mrs. Dodds said "It is a lodger's room, and he is out." Constable Hallett said that if the door was not opened "he would burst it open, and it was opened from the inside. There were seven men in the room, and witness found two mugs in the cupboard. with some beer in them. 'Mrs. Dodds said they had been there since the previous night...For the defence, Mr. Moloney said it was Christmas eve, and surely hotelkeepers were not to be banned the rights of social citizenship. The presence of the men was explained by the fact that they had met to arrange a fishing excursion for Christmas day. The dirty glass mugs had been ' used by lodgers, who put them there in the flurry caused by 'the visit of the police. ...'

First Owner

The original grantee of 1864, Matthew Spearey, built this row in c1865, extending the houses three years later. He retained ownership for at least twenty years and his tenants during that time included Thomas Moore, John Melvin, Thomas Pearson and James Tart. By 1896, the Australian Mutual Provident Society is listed as the owner. Perhaps as mortgagers they repossessed the buildings from the current owner, John H. Description/Notable Features

Two-storeyed face brick and stuccoed house row of 4 with a parapeted roof line, lower level iron decorated verandah and iron picket fence. Fenestration is symmetrical and chimney shafts panelled. Notable features include fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, well proportioned, recognisable early form, but partly altered. Also an early face brick building: of regional significance. Historically, long ownership by the original grantee which is unusual in the study area.

Recommended Alterations

Remove paint and rebuild fence at 343; consider re-zoning to preserve residential use and form.

Bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) fence gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments Integrity - The brickwork of 343 has been painted and its fence removed. Streetscape - Linked with 333 via a bland infill.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)History

The original grantee of 1864, Matthew Spearey, built this row in c1865, extending the houses three years later. He retained ownership for at least twenty years and his tenants during that time included Thomas Moore, John Melvin, Thomas Pearson and James Tart. By 1896, the Australian Mutual Provident Society is listed as the owner. Perhaps as mortgagers they repossessed the buildings from the current owner, John H. Walker, after the property crash of 1893.

Description

Two-storeyed face brick and stuccoed house row of 4 with a parapeted roof line, lower level iron decorated verandah and iron picket fence. Fenestration is symmetrical and chimney shafts panelled.

Integrity - The brickwork of 343 has been painted and its fence removed.

Streetscape - Linked with 333 via a bland infill.

Significance

Architecturally, well proportioned, recognisable early form, but partly altered. Also an early face brick building: of regional significance. Historically, long ownership by the original grantee which is unusual in the study area.

Recommendations

Remove paint and rebuild fence at 343; consider rezoning to preserve residential use and form.

'The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Wednesday 29 November 1939
'Modern Features of Model Factory WONDERS OF INDUSTRIAL ARCHITECTURE...
The present war must have some effect upon the overseas trade, but Australia's internal trade and industrial activity go on- In some respects war conditions are actually advancing Australia's industrial progress. Essential goods which cannot now be imported must be manufactured here. Many factories already are extending their plant. New industries are being established. 'Art, science and industry adroitly combined are giving to Melbourne many attractive Industrial buildings. Typical of these handsome modern structures is the new factory which has been built in Milton-street, West Melbourne, for the Cellular Clothing Company Ltd., manufacturers of Aertex under wear, as an addition to the company's factory at the northern end of William-street...

Attractive Features

The new factory of Cellular Clothing Co. Ltd. is a typical example of modern Industrial architecture. A two-story building, of bold outline, it presents an attractive exterior and a bright, airy interior. Outstanding features of the façade are the color effects obtained by the use of cream brickwork, with white horizontal ribs of concrete, the upper concrete hood in tints of turquoise blue, and the spacious facing of glass windows. Throughout the interior is evidence of the attention given to the comfort of employees. To ensure admission of every available ray of light, Luxcrete concrete window frames, extending from floor to ceiling, are used on the front elevation, and fitted with glass lenses, which spread the light far back into the building, so that employees in all parts may work without risk of eye strain. On the upper story roof windows set on the saw-tooth principle give south lighting, which is claimed to be equal to daylight at floor level, and more than sufficient for the most delicate needlework. A steel roof, constructed on a single span of more than 80 feet, leaves the floor entirely unobstructed by columns. It is lined with white sheets of fibrous plaster, which act as light reflectors, and is also insulated against extremes of heat and cold. A mechanical system of ventilation assures a free circulation of fresh air, and draws off all particles of fluff and other minute waste associated with the manufacture of clothing. By this system the air throughout the whole of the factory is completely changed six times every hour. Fresh air is drawn into the building at floor levels through ducts which extend down from the roof, and the used air is drawn away through other ducts. Before entering the building the air is cleansed and filtered, and the internal temperature is controlled by a thermostatic system'. The floors, of concrete, have a granolithic finish, and in the sections where girl operatives work are to be covered with a cork composition.

Facilities for Staff

For the convenience of the factory staff, rooms provided with steel lockers are available, and showers, with dressing rooms and other facilities, are provided for employees of both sexes. Morning tea and lunch will be served to employees in a large dining room, to which is attached a well equipped kitchen. Radio and telephone service : are being installed, and first-aid equipment, fire and burglar protection systems also are provided. Machinery of the most modern type is being installed for the manufacture of cellular material and its conversion into garments. To form the innumerable air cells which characterise this particular type of cloth special weaving machinery is required. In addition to a full range of weaving and knitting machines, the electrical installation at the factory includes cloth-cutting machines, a high-speed hoist, electric fans and motors. The building was designed by Mr. Rhys E. Hopkins, architect, of Flinders-lane, and erected under his supervision by Messrs. Rispin Bros., Collins-street. Mr. Cyril Hudspeth, of Little Collins-street, was responsible for the structural engineering work.'

'Pinus canariensis'

'...in the genus Pinus, family Pinaceae, native and endemic to the outer Canary Islands (Gran Canaria, Tenerife, Hierro and La Palma) in the Atlantic Ocean.[2] It is a subtropical pine and does not tolerate low temperatures or hard frost, surviving temperatures down to about 6 to 10 ° C. Within its natural area, it grows under extremely variable rainfall regimes, from less than 300 mm to several thousands, mostly due to differences in mist-capturing by the foliage. Under warm conditions, this is one of the most drought-tolerant pines, living even with less than 200 mm per year...

Pinus canariensis is a large evergreen tree, growing to 30–40 m tall and 100–120 cm trunk diameter (dbh), exceptionally up to 60 m tall and 265 cm diameter.[2] The green to yellow-green leaves are needle-like, in bundles of three, 20–30 cm long,[2] with finely toothed margins and often drooping. A characteristic of the species is the occurrence of glaucous (bluish-green) epicormic shoots growing from the lower trunk, but in its natural area this only occurs as a consequence of fire or other damage. In fact, this pine is one of the most fire-resistant conifers in the world. The cones are 10–18 cm long, 5 cm wide,[2] glossy chestnut-brown in colour and frequently remaining closed for several years (serotinous cones)'

'CITY COUNCIL ELECTIONS. Mr. J. W. PEIRCE AT WEST MELBOURNE

Mr. J. W. Peirce, the retiring councillor for Bourke Ward, met about 30 ratepayers at the James Watt Hotel, Spencer-street, last night. Dr. Lloyd occupied the chair. Mr. Peirce said that when he sought election three years ago he made many promises to the ratepayers, but he had never broken faith with them. It was in consequence of his action in the City Council that 75 extra lamps were erected in the ward, and the Flagstaff-gardens were improved, so that citizens could take their wives through them at night time. The 350 trees recently planted in the streets of the ward were the outcome of his energies. It had been proposed to erect a refrigerating room in the reserve of the Victoria Market, but he thought the land would be turned to better account if shops were erected on it, and he had this done. The shops already opened were returning 12 per cent, on the money expended on them. He acted on four committees of the council, and read a return of attendances to show that he was most regular. The work of the council was really done in committee, and not by those gentlemen who aired their eloquence at council meetings. It had always been his object to keep down the rating on citizens, and the council would soon be in such a position that it would not know what to do with its money. The Western Market would soon be acquired by it, and the returns which would be received from it would pay the expenditure of one ward.... While for 28 years their members of Parliament had been promising to obtain for them a recreation reserve, he had done so

The morning was occupied in lessons bearing on trees and their cultivation, and in the afternoon the board of advice attended, and a squad of cadets paraded with the flag, and the bugle band played. Trees were planted in the ground, and a large number of visitors were present.'

`Insolvent Court

An examination of witnesses was held yesterday in the Insolvent Court in the estate of G. and F. Zeplin, late of the Varieties, Bourke-street. The principal points of evidence elicited were that in January, 1860, Mr. George Zeplin settled a house and some land in William-street which he owned on his wife ; that he had sold the furniture in the house to one of his sons for £200, and that he had also sold three pieces of land to another son for £200. George Zeplin and both the sons referred to were examined with the view of ascertaining whether the avowed sales were collusive or not, and the evidence they gave was not at all of a satisfactory nature.'

Summary: In the Melbourne Argus on 10 September 1859,

the Zeplin Family (G. Zeplin and Sons) advertised that they had just arrived from London per ship Black Swan, and elsewhere on the same page it was already announced that Zeplin's Celebrated Quadrille Band was engaged for a Plain and Fancy Dress Ball at Trade's Hall, and that at Edward Wivell's Assembly Rooms "the celebrated English instrumentalists, the Zeplin Family, will perform the newest dance music, selection from the new opera Satanelle [Balfe], Jullien's latest composition, the Fern Leaves Waltz, &c.". Thereafter, as "Zeplin and Sons' Quadrille Band", they also advertised "Violin, harp, flageolet, Pianoforte taught". In October 1861, the "Band of the Messrs. Zeplin" appeared with the visiting artists Poussard and Douay at an afternoon promenade concert at the Victorian Exhibition. Thereafter "Zeplin's Band" played regularly at prominent Melbourne events, like the Governor's Ball in June 1864. In August 1864 it was announced that "Mr. F. Coppin and M. Zeplin" would be first violins in Frank Howson's orchestra at the New Haymarket Theatre. Two son were billed at the Theatre Comique in June 1867, "Musical Director, Mr. F. Zeplin ... Leader of the Orchestra, Mr. Tom Zeplin". Probably one or other of them directed the orchestra at the Governor's Ball again in November 1867, when it was reported: "The music was provided by Mr. Zeplin, whose admirable band comprised 30 performers, and the programme included the Duke of Edinburgh Galop, a spirited and effective composition by Mr. Zeplin himself." Having been lessees of the Varieties Theatre, George senior and Frederick were before the Insolvency Court in June 1876. That year Thomas Zeplin released, through W. H. Glen and Co., his first published compositions, The Lily Waltz in July, and Autumn leaves: suite de valse in November. Zeplin also composed music for several stage productions, a published offshoot of one of which was Round the world in 80 day: potpourri ("arranged by Fred. Lyster & Thos. Zeplin ; on airs written for this ... drama by Giorza, Zeplin, Fred. Lyster, Mrs. W. S. Lyster, etc.").

THE VARIETIES

aka Australia Hall / Opera Comique

Opera Comique (1866-1870) Bourke Street (between Swanston and Russell streets). The Varieties was originally known as the Australia Hall – a venue built over a stable. It opened as the Varieties in 1866, with the interior resembling an English music hall, complete with tables, chairs and a rough platform as a stage. Renamed the Opera Comique in 1869 it was destroyed by fire in July 1870. The site was later home to the Prince of Wales Opera House (1872), Her Majesty's Opera House (1884), Alhambra Palace of Varieties (1893) and Rickards' Opera House (1895). see Viola Tait.  David Howatt's own residence was further south along William Street, when he had these former row houses built as an investment, in 1873. On his death, they became part of his estate (1890) and then passed to William Howatt, presumably his son. Some of the lessees included George Joy, an accountant, Thomas Felton, George Watson, Richard Gillespie and William Kilfoyle. In 1866, Howatt was accredited with an application as owner-builder for a house in William Street, near Victoria, also in 1874

Before the days of the Chinese consular service in Melbourne the late Mr. William Howat befriended members of the Chinese community who in return for the kindnesses of their benefactor lavished on him many treasures from the Celestial Empire Surrounded by rare porcelains ivories lacquers and jades, appreciation grew for these rarities. Mr. Howat was imbued with the collecting spirit for 65 years and his house at William street West Melbourne was a bewildering labyrinth of treasures. Assembled and now catalogued the collection makes its appearance for view in the auction room next week The ivories numbering about 500 pieces represent the largest collection seen here. The mythology and the life of the peasantry of China and Japan are quaintly portrayed in these skilful carvings. Tsuba, the remarkable Japanese sword ornaments of bronze inlaid with precious metals and stones and netsuke the charming purse attachments have a special appeal to the small collector. Two precious sang de boeuf vases one an 18th century replica of its Ming companion are treasured in a casket of Australian blackwood. £400 was paid for these two pieces A superb Sevres tea service is painted with scenes from historical French battles. There is a large catalogue of coins medals and tokens including 20 military orders and decorations of Heinrich Steinmetz, a German lieutenant general. The most interesting example of furniture is the mahogany bureau bookcase in the Sheraton style. This has been well preserved and is one of the very few bureaux with any semblance of age that has appeared on the market for a long time The collection will be on view on Thursday next for three days.....'

History

David Howatt's own residence was further south along William Street, when he had these former row houses built as an investment, in 1873. On his death, they became part of his estate (1890) and then passed to William Howatt, presumably his son. Some of the lessees included George Joy, an accountant, Thomas Felton, George Watson, Richard Gillespie and William Kilfoyle. In 1866, Howatt was accredited with an application as owner-builder for a house in William Street, near Victoria, also in 1874

ART AND ANTIQUESWilliam Howat Collection

By JOSHUA N. MCCLELLAND

Before the days of the Chinese consular service in Melbourne the late Mr. William Howat befriended members of the Chinese community who in return for the kindnesses of their benefactor lavished on him many treasures from the Celestial Empire Surrounded by rare porcelains ivories lacquers and jades, appreciation grew for these rarities. Mr. Howat was imbued with the collecting spirit for 65 years and his house at William street West Melbourne was a bewildering labyrinth of treasures. Assembled and now catalogued the collection makes its appearance for view in the auction room next week The ivories numbering about 500 pieces represent the largest collection seen here. The mythology and the life of the peasantry of China and Japan are quaintly portrayed in these skilful carvings. Tsuba, the remarkable Japanese sword ornaments of bronze inlaid with precious metals and stones and netsuke the charming purse attachments have a special appeal to the small collector. Two precious sang de boeuf vases one an 18th century replica of its Ming companion are treasured in a casket of Australian blackwood. £400 was paid for these two pieces A superb Sevres tea service is painted with scenes from historical French battles. There is a large catalogue of coins medals and tokens including 20 military orders and decorations of Heinrich Steinmetz, a German lieutenant general. The most interesting example of furniture is the mahogany bureau bookcase in the Sheraton style. This has been well preserved and is one of the very few bureaux with any semblance of age that has appeared on the market for a long time The collection will be on view on Thursday next for three days.....'

History

David Howatt's own residence was further south along William Street, when he had these former row houses built as an investment, in 1873. On his death, they became part of his estate (1890) and then passed to William Howatt, presumably his son. Some of the lessees included George Joy, an accountant, Thomas Felton, George Watson, Richard Gillespie and William Kilfoyle. In 1866, Howatt was accredited with an application as owner-builder for a house in William Street, near Victoria, also in 1874 facade.

Integrity - Blinds have been attached to the facades and the stucco redone on 446, but generally original.

Streetscape - Part of an early residential precinct (Refer 436). Doors obscured.

Statement of Significance Architecturally, typical of the simple, stuccoed elevations of the 1870s (Refer to Capel Street Precinct) and of the similarly aged streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, associated with Howatt who built most of this streetscape and developed other properties in the area.

Recommendations

treasures from the Celestial Empire Surrounded by rare porcelains ivories lacquers and jades, appreciation grew for these rarities. Mr. Howat was imbued with the collecting spirit for 65 years and his house at William street West Melbourne was a bewildering labyrinth of treasures. Assembled and now catalogued the collection makes its appearance for view in the auction room next week The ivories numbering about 500 pieces represent the largest collection seen here. The mythology and the life of the peasantry of China and Japan are quaintly portrayed in these skilful carvings. Tsuba, the remarkable Japanese sword ornaments of bronze inlaid with precious metals and stones and netsuke the charming purse attachments have a special appeal to the small collector. Two precious sang de boeuf vases one an 18th century replica of its Ming companion are treasured in a casket of Australian blackwood. £400 was paid for these two pieces A superb Sevres tea service is painted with scenes from historical French battles. There is a large catalogue of coins medals and tokens including 20 military orders and decorations of Heinrich Steinmetz, a German lieutenant general. The most interesting example of furniture is the mahogany bureau bookcase in the Sheraton style. This has been well preserved and is one of the very few bureaux with any semblance of age that has appeared on the market for a long time The collection will be on view on Thursday next for three days.....'
