

Planning Scheme Amendments C272 and C273 - West Melbourne Heritage Review

17 May 2016

Presenter: Ian Hicks, Acting Manager Urban Strategy

Purpose and background

1. The purpose of this report is to present the West Melbourne Heritage Review 2016 and request that the Minister authorise the proposed Melbourne Planning Scheme Amendment C272 for the purpose of public exhibition and, concurrently, request Ministerial approval for Melbourne Planning Scheme Amendment C273 to act as an interim heritage control for the West Melbourne area.
2. The 2015-16 Council Plan has two actions relevant to this report:
 - 2.1. Action 2.6.4 is to 'Undertake a planning scheme amendment for the West Melbourne Structure Plan - Heritage Review'.
 - 2.2. Action 1.1.3 is to 'Consult on and Finalise the West Melbourne Structure Plan'.

Key issues

3. West Melbourne is a long established area with a variety of land uses. Over the past decade there has been a rapid transition taking place in West Melbourne towards higher density residential uses. Since 2004, dwelling numbers have almost doubled from 1251 to 2374 and three quarters of these dwellings are residential apartments. Currently, around 2800 residential dwellings are either under construction, approved or awaiting planning approval.
4. The planning underway for West Melbourne essentially has two streams of work. The West Melbourne Structure Plan primarily involves undertaking in depth analysis and consultation with all key stakeholders, including the local community, to consider the future of West Melbourne.
5. The West Melbourne Heritage Review is being undertaken in parallel. The primary purpose of the West Melbourne Heritage Review is to identify and protect the built form of the past that is important to the cultural and social heritage of the area. The West Melbourne Heritage Review has been completed and was made available via the City of Melbourne website on 6 May 2016.
<http://www.melbourne.vic.gov.au/about-council/governance-transparency/pages/draft-plans-and-strategies.aspx>
6. Planning Scheme Amendment C272 (Attachment 2) seeks to implement the findings of the West Melbourne Heritage Review by proposing changes to the heritage controls on a permanent basis. Amendment 272 proposes adding new individual heritage places and precincts, removing existing heritage places, modifying existing Heritage Overlays, altering heritage gradings and changing the description of places in the Heritage Overlay (Attachment 3).
7. Amendment C272 would go through the normal planning scheme amendment process, including public exhibition of the Amendment and the opportunity to make a written submission and be heard by a panel.
8. Amendment C273 (Attachment 4) is proposed to provide immediate protection on an interim basis for newly identified properties. Amendment C273 would be implemented through a Ministerial Amendment without notification. Amendment C273 seeks to provide protection to identified significant heritage places while the process of preparing the West Melbourne Structure Plan is underway.
9. In the context of current development activity in West Melbourne, the heritage review ensures that the community and developers are better informed about the sites of heritage and cultural significance in West Melbourne. The administration believes that the proposed additional heritage protection is consistent with significant economic development of the area, which is a likely outcome of the structure plan. The proposed Amendments provide the mechanism necessary to appropriately ensure the protection of important heritage sites and buildings as the area undergoes development and renewal.

Recommendation from management

- 6 That the Future Melbourne Committee:
 - 6.1 requests the Minister for Planning prepare Planning Scheme Amendment C273 pursuant to section 20(4) of the Planning and Environment Act 1987 (the Act) and approve the Amendment to introduce interim heritage controls
 - 6.2 seeks authorisation from the Minister for Planning under the Act, to prepare and exhibit Planning Scheme Amendment C272 which seeks to introduce permanent heritage controls for the West Melbourne area.

Legal

1. Part 3 of the Act sets out the procedure for planning scheme amendments. Section 8(1)(b) of the Act provides that the Minister may prepare amendments to any provision of a planning scheme. Section 20(4) of the Act provides that the Minister may exempt himself or herself from the requirements of the Act which govern the normal statutory process for amending a planning scheme:

“...if the Minister considers that compliance with any of those requirements is not warranted or that the interests of Victoria or any part of Victoria make such an exemption appropriate.”
2. Section 35 of the Act sets out that the Minister may approve an amendment to a planning scheme.

Finance

3. The costs for preparing and processing Planning Scheme Amendment C272 and Planning Scheme Amendment C273 are provided for within the 2015-16 budget.

Conflict of interest

4. No member of Council staff, or other person engaged under a contract, involved in advising on or preparing this report has declared a direct or indirect interest in relation to the matter of the report.

Stakeholder consultation

5. The West Melbourne area for the purposes of the heritage review is defined as the area bounded by Victoria Street, Peel Street, William Street, La Trobe Street, Adderley Street, Dudley Street, Railway Place and Laurens Street.
6. As the West Melbourne Heritage review is a technical paper based on the heritage consultant's professional findings, to date the West Melbourne heritage review process has not involved any stakeholder or community consultation.
7. As is standard practice, the review was made available online to the public 10 days prior to the FMC meeting at - www.melbourne.vic.gov.au.
8. Prior to this FMC meeting, letters were sent to the owners of all properties potentially affected by the proposed amendments, advising them of the Review, the amendments and that the Future Melbourne Committee will be considering the Amendments.
9. Should FMC resolve to proceed, public consultation will be undertaken through the formal exhibition of Planning Scheme Amendment C272, subject to authorisation being issued by the Minister for Planning. Affected property owners will have the opportunity through this process to respond to the findings of the Review and to the proposed planning controls.
10. Should an Independent panel be appointed to review Amendment C272, submissions made during exhibition of the Amendment will be provided to the panel for consideration. In this instance, submitters will also have the opportunity to address the Panel.

Environmental sustainability

11. The proposed Planning Scheme Amendment would have internationally recognised benefits for social, cultural, economic and environmental sustainability and ongoing resilience, in particular through the conservation of:
 - 11.1. Existing urban fabric for adaptive re-use to support locally-based and productive networks of exchange.
 - 11.2. Neighbourhood places with meaning and value for locals and visitors.
 - 11.3. Existing mature trees that provide shade and habitat.

Introduction

Background to this report

In 2015 the City of Melbourne commissioned Graeme Butler & Associates to provide heritage assessments of existing and potential heritage places in the West Melbourne Structure Plan area. Many of the assessed places had been identified in the 1983 Graeme Butler North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983) but others were highlighted by reviews carried out by Allom Lovell & Associates Report on the City of Melbourne Planning Scheme Heritage Review (2000) and Meredith Gould Architects (2003). MGA's later review, the Heritage Assessment Arden-Macaulay Structure Plan Area (2010), also provided a thematic insight into the West Melbourne area's development. The aim of the project was to examine these reviews and any subsequent data found on the selected places, and make recommendations for inclusion or otherwise in the schedule to clause 43.01 of the Melbourne Planning Scheme on the basis of local heritage significance. Reference was also made to the Thematic History – A History of the City of Melbourne's Urban Environment (2012).

The purpose of the Review is to determine which buildings and precincts in the study area warrant heritage protection under the Melbourne Planning Scheme. The Review will inform an amendment to the Melbourne Planning Scheme to ensure that properties with heritage significance are protected. It will also inform the preparation of the West Melbourne Structure Plan which will be undertaken in parallel (Project brief).

Scope of project

Review existing and potential heritage places in the West Melbourne Structure Plan Area.

Project objectives and deliverables from the project brief

- Prepare a Project Management Plan for approval by the Project Manager;
- Meet with relevant Council officers as required;
- Inspect, photograph, assess, review and document places in the West Melbourne study area;
- Review all buildings within the study area of which there are approximately 1172;
- Prepare an individual assessment of each place in the study area and a recommendation for each property (individually significant, contributory within a precinct, non contributory within a heritage precinct or no identified heritage significance; and a grading from A to D if appropriate). This report must clearly detail the reasons for any change;
- Gradings are to be consistent with those currently used outside the Capital City Zone. In addition, each place should be graded significant, contributory or non-contributory;
- Prepare Statements of Significance for all proposed precincts, and for all individually significant places;
- Prepare a Statement of Significance for places proposed to be graded A, B or C;
- Make a recommendation for each building in the study area detailing whether the place should be retained in, removed from, or added to, a Heritage Overlay as either an individually significant place or a contributory place or element within a precinct;
- A master map locating the above precincts and individually significant places with a corresponding legend in a format compatible with City of Melbourne's GIS system; and
- All identified places entered into an electronic database – with sources of information, both documentary and oral, levels of significance, statements of significance, physical descriptions, photographs and Heritage Overlay numbers¹.

West Melbourne Heritage Review

As the City of Melbourne is also doing a Local Heritage Planning Policy Review, a Statement of Significance for HO3 (North and West Melbourne Precinct) is being prepared by others. Hence this Review does not include preparation of a new Statement of Significance for HO3. However, in order to properly assess the 'contributory' or 'significant' status of assessed places, three interim Statements of Significance were used for this project, based on statements prepared by for the North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983) and by MGa in 2010 and 2011. The MGa City North Structure Plan Area Heritage Assessment (2011) was exhibited as part of the Melbourne Planning Scheme Amendment C198 which has been approved by the State Planning Minister (see Appendix 4: Heritage Overlay area Statements of Significance, historical themes, and thematic chronology).

Report contents

This report includes the following:

- Heritage assessment methodology;
- Study findings;
- Study recommendations;
- Appendix 1: Summary table of assessed places, with existing and recommended heritage status for each surveyed place, also a summary of recommendations;
- Appendix 2: Heritage Assessments: all places, with analysis, research and recommendations for each surveyed place;

- Appendix 3: Detailed heritage assessments, Statement of Significance for each potential significant place, with a map showing the place;
- Appendix 4: Heritage Overlay Area Statements of Significance, with existing Statement of Significance for the North and West Melbourne area, historical themes and thematic chronology, and conclusions from chronology;
- Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by Melbourne City Council such as grading of places and streetscapes;
- Appendix 6: Assessment criteria used in this report, as guided by Heritage Victoria polices; and
- Appendix 7 West Melbourne Comparative Analysis Grouping by place type and place creation date, as a basis for comparison of places assessed in the project.

In addition, significant places and areas have been marked on a vector base plan provided by the City of Melbourne. Survey and data images have also been provided as a separate issue, numbering over 6000 files.

Heritage assessment methodology

Methodology for each place assessment

The following work was undertaken to document the subject places to a minimum standard, using the nominated sources, as required:

- Place record of 16 and 21 mega pixel digital images, with at least one image of each place in the project area;
- Initial place assessment based on physical and known historical evidence²;
- Municipal rates search to establish first or principal owners and/or occupiers for potentially significant places;
- City of Melbourne building permits search to verify construction dates, owners, designers and builders for selected places;
- A search of Sands & Kenny or Sands & McDougall Melbourne or Victorian directories to discover occupiers as required; and

² Date range for potential significant assessed places is qualified - see Limitations of this review.

West Melbourne Heritage Review

- Examination of Melbourne & Metropolitan Board of Works (cited in this report as MMBW) Detail and Record Plans of Melbourne typically from around 1895 showing building stock at that time; and
- City of Melbourne online maps that provide current property and planning data on each place in West Melbourne along historical layers to the maps that show the MMBW detail plans, consolidated title or Parish Plans and the 1945 aerial photography of Melbourne.

Wherever possible the results from searching these references have been included in this report as part of the assessment to provide the basis for any future assessments.

Reference was also made to: Meredith Gould Architects (MGa), Arden Macaulay Structure Plan Area (2010); Allom Lovell and Associates City of Melbourne Heritage Review (2000); and Context, Thematic History - A City of the City of Melbourne's Urban Environment (2012) and the City of Melbourne Heritage Precincts Background History & Significance Assessment (2007), prepared as a proposed reference to Clause 22.06 of the Melbourne Planning Scheme.

Place report, mapping and management for each place

- Each place report and Statement of Significance is based on the Heritage Victoria standard format and as specified by the brief, with management deriving from the Applying the Heritage Overlay (2012) VPP Practice Note;
- Comparative analysis and background research draws from this project's West Melbourne Heritage Review survey database, the North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983), the Flemington & Kensington Conservation Study (1984), subsequent reviews, and City of Melbourne i-Heritage online data base;
- Places are assessed individually and as groups, within the West Melbourne area context;

- Heritage gradings are consistent with those currently used in the area as described in the policy reference, Urban Conservation in the City of Melbourne (1985)³ and the incorporated document Heritage Places Inventory (2008, 2015), and assessment of the cultural significance of each heritage place, using Victorian Heritage Council criteria;
- Recommended planning controls are provided for places worthy of conservation;
- Draft Schedule to the Heritage Overlay for places recommended for a Heritage Overlay is provided (see table under Summary of findings);
- All identified places of proposed individual cultural significance are marked on a City of Melbourne vector base map, as supplied, and on the City of Melbourne online map extract, in each place report in Appendix 3: Statements of Significance;
- Covering report for each place assessed individually is provided (see Appendix 3: Statements of Significance),
- All reporting is in Adobe Portable Document Format (PDF) and Microsoft Word form as required;
- A Microsoft Access database of the West Melbourne Heritage Review which includes all the listed places and which can be used by the City of Melbourne for future studies, has been supplied along with a comma separated values(CSV) delimited text file for easy export to the City of Melbourne data systems; and
- 16 and 21-megapixel digital survey images of all places, typically multiple views, supplied to the City of Melbourne on a USB drive (some 24 gigabytes or 6,800 files).

The schedule of place assessments in Appendix 2: Heritage assessments is based in part on the following with added footnotes and updated information as required by the review:

³ Heritage Places outside of the Capital City Zone, Clause 22.05

- Graeme Butler North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983), and
- Allom Lovell and Associates, City of Melbourne Heritage Review (2000).

Methodology detailsCriteria and thresholds

(For more details see Appendix 6: Assessment criteria used in this report)

All places have been assessed using the Victorian Heritage Register or Victorian Heritage Council criteria (as Applying the Heritage Overlay VPP Practice Note) under the broad categories of aesthetic, historic, social and scientific significance. The comparative geographic base used is that of the 'locality' (all or part of the West Melbourne project area) and the State of Victoria. A place must be at least of local significance to be included in the Melbourne Planning Scheme (MPS) Heritage Overlay⁴.

Heritage Victoria criteria summary

The Victorian Planning Provisions (VPP) Practice Note, Applying the Heritage Overlay (2012) cites the following criteria as appropriate for heritage assessment in Victoria. The relevant criteria used in this report are identified by their alpha-numeric code and are briefly described as follows:

Criterion A: Importance to the course or pattern of our cultural or natural history (historical significance).

Criterion B: Possession of uncommon rare or endangered aspects of our cultural or natural history (rarity).

Criterion C: Potential to yield information that will contribute to an understanding of our cultural or natural history (research potential).

Criterion D: Importance in demonstrating the principal characteristics of a class of cultural or natural places or environments (representativeness).

Criterion E: Importance in exhibiting particular aesthetic characteristics (aesthetic significance).

Criterion F: Importance in demonstrating a high degree of creative or technical achievement at a particular period (technical significance).

Criterion G: Strong or special association with a particular community or cultural group for social, cultural or spiritual reasons. This includes the significance of a place to Indigenous peoples as part of their continuing and developing cultural traditions (social significance).

Criterion H: Special association with the life or works of a person, or group of persons, of importance in our history (associative significance).

West Melbourne Heritage Review

Introduction

Between the Yarra and the Maribyrnong, the low-lying country was a land-locked salt marsh, which would become known to settlers as the West Melbourne Swamp⁵.

3.1 From town to city

...From 1890s to the 1920s there was a decline in the residential population of the central city as people moved out to the newly developed suburbs. Inner-city suburbs like North Melbourne, West Melbourne, Flemington and Carlton remained strongly residential, with a large working-class population. Here, rows of small cottages were lined up close to local factories. Boarding houses or lodging houses provided additional accommodation for single working men⁶.

3.2 Expressing an architectural style

Timber houses were still being built, particularly in Fitzroy... Fear of conflagrations in areas of densely packed timber houses led to the enactment of the Melbourne Building Act, which came into effect in January 1850. It stipulated that all new buildings had to have a masonry party wall (which extended above the roofline in the case of terrace houses) and be constructed of fireproof materials. The Act was applied to the central city, East Melbourne and Jolimont, West Melbourne and a small part of North Melbourne (south of Victoria Parade). Concurrent with the gazettal of the Act was a minor building boom with a resultant rise in quality from the previous rough cottages to more pretentious, speculatively built, two-storey brick houses. The housing stock greatly expanded in the early Victorian period, with further construction of houses in the central city and surrounding suburbs (Carlton, East Melbourne, North Melbourne and West Melbourne). These were simple houses of one and two storeys, with bluestone or brick walls. Inferior-quality bricks were often rendered to protect them from weathering, and the rendering ruled and often coloured to resemble the more prestigious ashlar stone⁷.

Apartment living in converted commercial and industrial buildings in the city and surrounding inner suburbs of North and West Melbourne has involved the creative talents of many architectural practices⁸.

5.2 Melbourne as a trading port

By the 1880s, Melbourne had grown from being a small settlement serving pastoral interests to a major international port. Coode Canal, which was formed in 1886, altered the course of the Yarra to provide a shorter and more direct passage for shipping and so improve the harbour. This work involved the removal of the bend in the river known as Fishermen's Bend.⁹ Dry docks were built on the reclaimed site of the drained West Melbourne Swamp.¹⁰ With the completion of Victoria Dock in 1892 Melbourne continued to develop as a busy international port;

5.5 Building a manufacturing industry

The land that factories were built on tended to be low-lying and undesirable for residential use; factories were most concentrated in West Melbourne, North Melbourne and Kensington. The higher ground of East Melbourne, by contrast, was almost free of industry, with the notable exception of the Victoria Brewery, an expansive red-brick castellated structure. Another important industrial area was on the south bank of the Yarra, where metal workshops and ship repair yards were located¹¹.

As Melbourne developed through the 19th century, so did her manufacturing industry. Flinders Lane became an important area for clothing manufacturers, while Chinese cabinet makers were concentrated at the east end of town. Food-processing plants were established in North and West Melbourne. Factories tended to be small and specialised. Large factories, built in the later 19th century and early 20th century tended to be built outside the City of Melbourne, where land was more easily obtainable.

After being the centre of manufacturing in Australia in the 1920s, Melbourne's importance in this regard began to decline. In the post-war period many city factories and warehouses were left empty or converted for other uses. The industrial area of Southbank has been virtually obliterated by the new developments of the 1990s¹².

6.4 Disposing of the dead

In 19th-century Melbourne human remains were almost always interred in public cemeteries. Some early churchyard cemeteries existed in Victoria, but these were rare. Burial was preferred over cremation, with the exception of Hindu funerals. Anglicans relaxed the prohibition on cremation in the early 20th century but for Catholics it remained forbidden. Melbourne's first burial ground was a site of around eight acres on Burial Hill (later named Flagstaff Hill) in 1838; the first burial had allegedly taken place the year prior.¹³ Richard Howitt noted in 1845 that 'the spot is neat, orderly, and contains some graceful monuments'.¹⁴

A larger area was soon required and a new site for a cemetery was set aside in West Melbourne on the site of the current Victoria Market; this was first used in 1837. The principal Christian denominations — Church of England, Catholic, Presbyterian and Methodist — were designated specific areas within the cemetery, while Aborigines and Chinese were assigned land at the margins¹⁵.

8.2 Housing the population

In the city of Melbourne there were a number of low-lying areas, such as West Melbourne and Flemington, where poor grade housing and poor sanitation contributed to high rates of disease and child mortality. Yet amidst the stench and the filth of the city streets, and the routine failings of the water supply, many lavished praise on Melbourne's plumbing arrangements. In the 1880s Julian Thomas ('The Vagabond') noted that 'There is hardly the smallest cottage without its bathroom'. The disparity between the villas of East Melbourne and the simple workers' cottages of West Melbourne reflected on a small scale the broader tendency in Melbourne's suburbs of what has been termed 'the poor west vs. affluent east syndrome'.¹⁶ Outside of the central city grid, in the surrounding suburbs of Carlton, West Melbourne, North Melbourne and East Melbourne, there was a greater concentration of residential building and more early housing has survived here than in the central city¹⁷.

8.3 Educating the people

Within the City of Melbourne, new state schools were built at Yarra Park in 1872; King Street, West Melbourne (No. 1689) in 1876;

Faraday Street, Carlton; and Queensberry Street, Carlton¹⁸.

The West Melbourne boys' technical school was established in La Trobe Street in 1912... William Angliss Food Trades School, established on the site of the West Melbourne Technical School in 1940.

10.2 Belonging to a religious denomination

Other Catholic churches in Melbourne included St Augustine's at the city's western end, Sacred Heart Church in Rathdowne Street, Carlton, and St Mary's, West Melbourne. On the site of St Mary's Star of the Sea, West Melbourne, there was a girls' school, a boys' school and a presbytery. In North Melbourne, Catholic education was provided at St Joseph's Christian Brothers' College and St Michael's school in Boundary Road¹⁹.

The thematic history has identified West Melbourne as a working class residential suburb with associated small row house construction and intermixed was the industrial development well located near transport nodes.

Historical themes

The main historical themes that form the background to place assessment derive generally from Context, Thematic History - A City of the City of Melbourne's Urban Environment (2012) typically as identified above.

3.1 From town to city

3.2 Expressing an architectural style

5.2 Melbourne as a trading port

5.5 Building a manufacturing industry

6.4 Disposing of the dead

8.2 Housing the population

8.3 Educating the people.

These themes can be loosely associated with the Australian Historic Themes matrix and the Victoria Framework of Historic Themes (VFHT) developed by Heritage Victoria.

The VFHT theme of Developing a manufacturing capacity aligns with the Melbourne thematic history theme of Building a Commercial City and sub-theme Building a manufacturing industry.

These themes have been allocated to each contributory or significant place assessed in the database.

Comparative analysis

(Refer Appendix 7: Comparative analysis)

The West Melbourne Heritage Review survey database has provided the key comparison base for locally significant places with comparison and evaluation made on the basis of the place assessed in the project that represent a similar age or period (early Victorian-era, Victorian-era, Edwardian-era, Interwar, post-war); having a similar scale (storeys), building style, and original building use. These data categories are included in the database.

Statement of Significance format

Heritage Victoria's Statement of Significance format is used for the following assessments, in the form, with account taken of any existing citation and its format:

- What is significant?
- How is it significant?
- Why is it significant?

Statement of Significance content

The following is cited by the VPP Practice Note 1 Applying the Heritage Overlay (p.2)²⁰

What is significant?

This section should be brief, usually no more than one paragraph or a series of dot points. There should be no doubt about the elements of the place that are under discussion. The paragraph should identify features or elements that are significant about the place, for example, house, outbuildings, garden, plantings, ruins, archaeological sites, interiors as a guide to future decision makers. Mention could also be made of elements that are not significant.

How is it significant?

A sentence should be included to the effect that the place is important because of its historical significance, its rarity, its research potential, its representativeness, its aesthetic significance, its technical significance and/or its associative significance. These descriptors are shown in brackets at the end of the heritage criteria listed above. The sentence should indicate the threshold for which the place is considered important.

Why is it significant?

This should elaborate on the criteria that makes the place significant. A separate point or paragraph should be used for each criterion satisfied. The relevant criterion should be inserted in brackets after each point or paragraph. Each point or paragraph may include the threshold for which the place is considered important.

Limitations of this review

No review of environmental history

The existing thematic environmental history, the Thematic History – A History of the City of Melbourne's Urban Environment (2012), was used for this project and has not been reviewed.

Heritage Victoria places

Review of Victorian Heritage Register places was not part of the project brief, but existing Statements of Significance and place mapping have been included.

Assessment date range

Although all places in West Melbourne have been surveyed, the typical date range, assessed for heritage values in Appendix 2: Heritage assessments - all places, has been set at c1835-c1945. This is consistent with the identified significant period of the HO3 North and West Melbourne precinct, as including the Victorian and Edwardian eras and, potentially, the Interwar period (see Appendix 3: Statements of Significance). Post-Second War places provide a contribution if they have been identified as individually significant.

²⁰ Also referred to as the Practice Note.

West Melbourne Heritage Review

In 2008, Heritage Victoria commissioned the comprehensive study Survey of Post-War Built Heritage in Victoria to cover the period from 1945 to 2000: this work has guided the West Melbourne Heritage Review.

Significant post World War Two places listed in this survey from West Melbourne include:

- Festival Hall 300 Dudley Street West Melbourne (1955-56);
- Don Camillo Cafe 215 Victoria Street West Melbourne (1955); and
- Yuncken Freeman Pty Ltd architectural offices, 411-415 King Street West Melbourne (1970).

The Royal Australian Institute of Architects (Vic) architectural award list has also been consulted.

Interiors

Interiors were typically not assessed in this review, given time constraints and the need to obtain owner or occupier permission.

Although protection of heritage interiors is achievable under the Heritage Overlay the Practice Note states that:

Applying internal alterations controls
Internal alteration controls over specified buildings can be applied in the schedule by including a 'yes' in the Internal Alteration Controls Apply? column.
This provision should be applied sparingly and on a selective basis to special interiors of high significance. The statement of significance for the heritage place should explain what is significant about the interior and why it is important

As protected interiors must be of 'high significance', this limits the scope and application of this aspect of protection of built heritage. Past Panels Victoria reports have requested a comparative analysis before any application of interior control which would prove difficult without free access to interiors, to provide a comparative base²¹.

Study findings

The table in Appendix 1: Summary table of all surveyed places includes surveyed places in the West Melbourne area arranged in street alphabetical order, that were assessed in this project, with proposed and existing heritage gradings provided. The existing gradings are derived from the incorporated document Heritage Places Inventory (2015).

Summary of findings

- Most places assessed in existing Heritage Overlays have changed little since identified in the North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983), or subsequent reviews. Therefore, the heritage values identified then have remained the same except perhaps with the addition of hitherto unknown historical values as a result of the 2015 reassessment;
- However, some places in the Heritage Overlay have changed markedly and the revised heritage grading reflects this change;
- With redevelopment encroaching from the Central Activities District (CAD), comparable places to those assessed have been reduced in number and hence this reduction has increased the relative significance of some of the places;
- Parts of West Melbourne were initially an elite residential area situated close to the City, near the Flagstaff Gardens and overlooking the bay with, for example, some early Victorian-era row houses in Dudley Street, reflecting this today (i.e. Rich Hill Terrace);
- West Melbourne development varied from the gold-induced boom (1851-) through to the minor recession of the 1870s, the following boom in the 1880s and early 1890s, with the bulk of identified structures reflecting this development phase in the area and its special role as a substantially Victorian-era domain within Melbourne's suburbs;
- The redevelopment of the former Benevolent Asylum site (active 1851-1911) from 1913 created a distinctive enclave of Edwardian-era and inter-war structures in West Melbourne that could form the basis of a Heritage Overlay Area, separate from the existing HO3 North and West Melbourne²²- this has already been acknowledged in the MGa review of 2011²³;

West Melbourne Heritage Review

- Enhanced by proximity to the City and a growing nearby transport hub, the central role played by West Melbourne (also North Melbourne and Kensington) in the industrial development of the Colony, the State, and Australia, prior to post-Second War reconstruction and the move of industry to outer suburbs, as demonstrated by some of the assessed Victorian-era, Edwardian-era and inter-war industrial places in this report;
- Workers at the nearby docks and railways have been identified in this Review, with the hierarchy in the Victorian-era workplace reflected in the type of West Melbourne housing and development undertaken by those individuals linked with transport, with for example, engine drivers building substantial houses and speculating in nearby housing development;
- The Interwar industrial development surge in Melbourne and Victoria, partly caused by home-front war time needs, left its mark on West Melbourne due to its close proximity to ports, transport and the City centre as some identified places reflect;
- The role of transport access, rail and sea and its effect on the growth of industrial development in West Melbourne, as well as the West Melbourne residential areas where owners or employees in these industries built their house, rented or acted as small scale developers;
- The prevalence of small scale development by West Melbourne residents who lived in, or next to, house rows they developed;
- Some of the West Melbourne places, individually listed within the Heritage Overlay, had no Statement of Significance – these have typically been provided in this Review²⁴;
- Places graded A, B or C in the North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983) or Central Activities District (CAD) Conservation Study (1985) have been provided with a Statement of Significance in the Practice Note format;
- Historical data provided in some of the past studies and reviews of heritage places within the project area have proved to be incorrect- this has been remedied in this Review;

- The incorporated document, the Heritage Place Inventory (2015) is, in part, incomplete and/or incorrect and requires amendment reflecting the findings of this review - recommendations have been made, as summarised in Appendix 1: Summary table of all surveyed places;
- The significant collection of City of Melbourne building permit application drawings held at the Victorian Public Records Office (VPRO) provides essential data for heritage management of many of these places, but drawings are stored rolled up in tubes, with consequent damage caused by access and conservation issues, and some drawings are in need of urgent conservation- all drawings should be digitised and public access provided to them.

Study recommendations

The table in Appendix 1: Summary table of all surveyed places, arranged in street alphabetical order, shows recommendations for potential inclusion or retention in the schedule to clause 43.01 of The Melbourne Planning Scheme: Heritage Overlay.

- Places recommended for inclusion as a significant individual heritage place in the Heritage Overlay are assessed as either State or locally significant to West Melbourne or the City of Melbourne and of a City of Melbourne heritage grading of A, B, or C (see Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne).
- Places that are individually significant are typically also assessed as being contributory to West Melbourne.
- Heritage places that are assessed as contributory only within an existing or proposed Heritage Overlay area typically have a City of Melbourne place grading of D.
- Places assessed as of potential State significance, and City of Melbourne place grading of A, are recommended for inclusion in the Victorian Heritage Register;
- Similarly, places that are on the Victorian Heritage Register are recommended for 'A' grading.

²⁴ Amendment C19 to the Melbourne Planning Scheme for example HO842 411-415 King Street, West Melbourne

West Melbourne Heritage Review

Any place recommended for inclusion in the Victorian Heritage Register is automatically recommended for the Melbourne Planning Scheme Heritage Overlay and, failure to achieve entry to the Register, should not prevent its inclusion in the Heritage Overlay. Similarly, if only part of an identified significant place is included on the Victorian Heritage Register, the balance of the place should be included in the Schedule to the Heritage Overlay.

Existing heritage gradings from the City of Melbourne Heritage Places Inventory (2015) are included with proposed upgrades evident on the basis of enhancement or hitherto unknown historical information or, downgrades, because of external change, alterations or demolition.

Detailed recommendations

(Refer to Appendix 1: Summary table of all surveyed places for place specific recommendations.)

This report recommends that:

- Places and associated land, recommended in the Appendix 1: Summary table of all surveyed places for inclusion in a Heritage Overlay, should be added to the Schedule to the Heritage Overlay Clause 43.01 of the Melbourne Planning Scheme, as qualified by any detailed recommendations in each assessment, see Appendix 2: Heritage assessments;
- External Paint Controls should apply within the Schedule to the Heritage Overlay (clause 43.01) for all additional built places;
- Tree Control should be applied in the Heritage Overlay schedule for identified significant trees or consideration for a Vegetation Protection Overlay (schedule to clause 42.02);
- Places and associated land, where assessed to be of State significance, should be nominated by the City of Melbourne for assessment by the Victorian Heritage Council for potential inclusion on the Victorian Heritage Register;
- The proposed City of Melbourne heritage grading in this report (A-D) should be applied in the context of the relevant level of management, as outlined in the Melbourne Planning Scheme local policy (Heritage Places outside of the Capital City Zone, Clause 22.05 of the Melbourne Planning Scheme) and the reference document, Urban Conservation in the City of Melbourne (1985);
- The contributory elements or fabric described in each assessment (typically elements from the principal creation date or dates of the place) should be conserved and enhanced following the stated purpose of clause 43.01;
- The proposed gradings, once adopted, should be added to or replace those existing in the Heritage Place Inventory (2105);
- City of Melbourne i-Heritage online heritage database should reflect the changed gradings to avoid confusion;
- City of Melbourne entries in the Hermes online database should be edited to reflect the findings of this Review;
- The City of Melbourne should encourage or aid in the digitisation and flat storage of the significant collection of City of Melbourne building permit application drawings held at the Victorian Public Records Office that are currently rolled up in tubes, with consequent public access and conservation issues; and
- The Statements of Significance and place assessments from this review in Appendix 2: Heritage assessments - all places should form part of an Incorporated Document in the Melbourne Planning Scheme to guide heritage management of the significant places of West Melbourne.

Management

Background

This Review does not include a review of existing management policies by the City of Melbourne. Refer to following management policies set out in the Melbourne Planning Scheme.

City of Melbourne heritage management policies

The management policies applied by Council when considering relevant permit applications are dependent on the particular place and streetscape grading. These performance standards are set out in the “Heritage Places Outside the Capital City Zone” local policy at Clause 22.05 of the Melbourne Planning Scheme. This local policy only applies to places within the Heritage Overlay Area that are situated outside of the Capital City Zone.

City of Melbourne heritage policy reference

The heritage policy references for the project area are as follows.

Relevant heritage policy references in the Melbourne Planning Scheme

- Urban Conservation in the City of Melbourne (1985);
- Harbour, Railways, Industrial Conservation Study (1985);
- North & West Melbourne Conservation Study (1985)²⁵ and (1994);
- Flemington & Kensington Conservation Study (1985);
- Kensington Heritage Review, Graeme Butler (2013)
- Review of Heritage Buildings in Kensington: Percy Street Area, Graeme Butler (2013); and
- Central Activities District Conservation Study (1985).

Appendix 1: Summary table of all surveyed places

The following table provides information on all of the surveyed places in the West Melbourne project area under the headings below:

Place address

Alphabetical street order, using City of Melbourne addresses.

Place name

Typically based on the original owner or place name.

Existing Heritage Overlay

The existing Heritage Overlay number as listed in the schedule to clause 43.01, Melbourne Planning Scheme.

Existing grading of place

Place heritage rankings or gradings on the scale of A-D as defined in the Heritage Places Inventory (2015). See Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne.

Existing streetscape level of place

Streetscape Levels ranked on the scale of 1-3 as defined in Heritage Places Inventory (2015). See Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne.

Proposed place grading

Proposed revised place gradings A-D (see Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne) typically for places dating from c1835-1945. See Limitations of this review.

Proposed streetscape level for place

Proposed revised streetscape levels 1-3. See Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne.

Significant -Is the place individually significant?

Assessed as individually significant, judged within the local (West Melbourne or the City of Melbourne) or State context, and using the stated Heritage Victoria criteria as compared to similar places, typically for places dating from c1835-1970.

Is the place contributory to a Heritage Overlay Area?

Assessed as contributory to an existing Heritage Overlay or Heritage Overlay area, using the Heritage Victoria criteria and the existing Statements of Significance for North and West Melbourne (See Appendix 4: Heritage Overlay area Statements of Significance, historical themes, and thematic chronology).

Place specific recommendations

Recommendations for places, that are in addition to the general recommendations provided above. These involve, for example, potential adjustment to existing Heritage Overlay boundaries, names or contributory elements. Also in the case of identified significant trees on private land, the City of Melbourne has an Exceptional Tree Register that could also be considered for listing these trees as well as the Heritage Overlay. For further information, refer to the place assessments in Appendix 2: Heritage assessments - all places.

Appendix 2: Heritage assessments - all places

The following are brief preliminary assessments of, and research on, all surveyed places in the West Melbourne project area. Places within the project area, assessed in the Arden-Macaulay Heritage Review 2012, are excluded from this report.

Refer to Appendix 3: for heritage assessments and Statements of Significance for potential individually significant places, as precincts streetscapes or individual places.

Place assessment data

This Appendix provides the following information:

Place address

Arranged in alphabetical street order, using City of Melbourne addresses.

Place name

Name based on original or early owner or place name if known.

Survey notes

Brief preliminary observations from the project survey, typically noting distinctive elements at the place that have not been noted previously in the Building Identification Form (BIF) or changes since previous assessments.

A typical entry is 'Generally unchanged since North and West Melbourne Conservation Study - refer to i-Heritage search results: Abstract of Building Identification Form (BIF) in References below'- this refers to the abstract of the heritage study Building Information Form (BIF) available on the City of Melbourne i-Heritage web site that has management recommendations and details on the place. Another common entry is 'Not assessed' which refers to places outside of the identified significant period in North and West Melbourne, this period being focussed on Victorian and Edwardian-era places as supported by Interwar places. Post Second War places are generally not assessed unless recognised individually in a comparative heritage work for its significance, such as the Heritage Victoria post-war study. (Refer to Limitations of this review)

Existing Heritage Overlay

The existing Heritage Overlay number and name as seen in the schedule to clause 43.01, Melbourne Planning Scheme.

Existing grading of place

Place heritage rankings or gradings on the scale of A-D, as defined in the Heritage Places Inventory (2015). See Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne.

Existing streetscape level of place

Streetscape Levels ranked on the scale of 1-3, as defined in the Heritage Places Inventory (2015). See Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne.

Proposed place grading

Proposed revised place gradings A-D (see Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne) within the identified West Melbourne thematic context and typically for places dating from c1835-1945 (refer to Limitations of this review).

Proposed streetscape level for place

Proposed revised streetscape levels 1-3 (see Appendix 5: Heritage definitions used by City of Melbourne) within the West Melbourne thematic context.

What era or date does the place express?

An estimated creation date for the place followed by its expression of key eras in the development of West Melbourne and the City of Melbourne:

- Early Victorian-era typically 1837-1875;
- Victorian-era, 1837-1900;
- Edwardian-era, 1901-1918;
- Interwar era, 1919-1945; and
- Post World War Two era, 1945-.

What are the heritage values seen at the place?

The following heritage or cultural values are the recognised key aspects possessed by a place for potential recognition within the planning scheme Heritage Overlay (see Appendix 6: Assessment criteria used in this report).

- Historical;

West Melbourne Heritage Review

- Aesthetic;
- Social; and/or
- Scientific.

These values may be evident but not necessarily significant.

Is the place individually significant?

Assessed as individually significant judged within the local (West Melbourne or the City of Melbourne) or State context using the stated Heritage Victoria criteria as compared to similar places (refer Appendix 6: Assessment criteria used in this report) and typically for places dating from c1835-1940, as guided by the existing Statements of Significance for the Heritage Overlays surveyed.

Where a place has not been assessed because of its creation date range (post 1945) and known status (no awards), 'not significant or contributory' is selected where the place is of no recognised or known significance and does not contribute to the identified heritage themes in the West Melbourne area.

Is the place contributory to a Heritage Overlay Area?

The place is assessed as contributory to an existing Heritage Overlay or Heritage Overlay Area (Heritage Overlay listed, typically HO3, North and West Melbourne) using the stated Heritage Victoria criteria and the existing or interim Statement of Significance (see Appendix 4: Heritage Overlay area Statements of Significance, historical themes, and thematic chronology and Appendix 6: Assessment criteria used in this report).

Historic themes represented?

(See Appendix 4: Heritage Overlay area Statements of Significance, historical themes, and thematic chronology) Thematic expression is as defined in Thematic History – A History of the City of Melbourne's Urban Environment (2012).

Recommendations

Recommendations for places, that are in addition to the general recommendations provided above, involving for example potential adjustment of existing Heritage Overlay boundaries, names or contributory elements. Also in the case of identified significant trees on private land, the City of Melbourne has an Exceptional Tree Register that could also be considered for listing these trees as well as the Heritage Overlay or the Vegetation Protection Overlay.

 Tariff Board witnesses today, when a request was made for an import duty of 20 per cent, for bags and sacks, agreed that the potentialities of the Australian bag and sack industry had not been investigated thoroughly. Statistics showed that the annual importation of bags and sacks to Australia was 90,000,000. Mr. Stanley Gadsden (director, J. Gadsden Pty., Ltd.) said that several Victorian firms had begun to manufacture jute woven goods, but Indian competition made it impossible to continue the industry. Australia imported all her sacks from India. In the last five years. Australia had shipped £5,500,000 in gold and silver bullion to India, but this shipment would have been obviated by a local sack industry.'

'300 tins a minute

SAFETY and comfort of Australian troops overseas has been the business of J. Gadsden Pty. Ltd. for nearly 70 years. And since 1887 the company has pioneered the huge tinned food industry in the Southern Hemisphere. It opened in Melbourne to make calico and hessian bags. During the Boer War and World War I Gadsden sent thousands of sandbags to protect our soldiers in Africa and Europe. It manufactured millions of food tins for troops throughout the world during the last war. Since then it has set up a factory in every State and four in New Zealand to provide food tins for an expanding industry. Gadsden's factory at Albert Park, near Adelaide, uses machines which will produce 300 cans a minute. This output makes the South Australian branch the biggest food can manufacturer in the State. THEIR cans are used for condensed milk, fruit, butter, cheese, cream, jams and vegetables. The company introduced tinplate printing in Australia, and now makes tins for oil companies and paint manufacturers.'

140007 J. Gadsden Factory (Former) 36-38 Charles Street Coburg North

'Place history

In 1923 Coburg was declared the most progressive industrial suburb in the Metropolitan area, mainly for the availability of providing comparatively large home sites near work places. (Allom Lovell, 1998:49). Coburg has comparatively few surviving pre-1930s factory buildings however a number of major manufacturing plants have been developed in the post war years including Gadsden's factory now occupied by Visy. Gadsden's was one of two factories in Coburg designed by Norris Architects, the other being the now demolished Kodak factory. The availability of large clear sites in Coburg was an important reason for the attraction of major new manufacturing complexes that have helped shape the appearance of the suburb. (Vines and Churchward, 1992:108)

SURVEYED PLACES

The factory at 36-38 Charles Street was constructed originally for J. Gadsden Pty Ltd, a major Australian packaging company, as the first stage of a complex that would be developed in stages from the mid-1950s onwards. The land on which the factory is located was originally part of 34 acres and 9 perches acquired by W.D. & H.O. Wills (Australia)

Ltd in 1945 (Certificate of Title, V.6800 F.980). The company later subdivided and Lot 2, comprising 14 acres and 30 perches, was sold to J. Gadsden Pty Ltd in July 1953 (Certificate of Title, V.7890 F.038). The land remained vacant for a few years before J. Gadsden Pty Ltd constructed a factory and offices on the site, which was completed by 1956 (City of Coburg Rate Books).

Building records show that approval for the factory was provided by the Department of Labour and Industry (Victoria) in October 1955, and the building permit for the first factory was duly lodged one month later by the building contractor, E.A. Watts Pty Ltd. Subsequent applications followed in 1956 and 1959 for extensions and additions. J. Gadsden Pty Ltd had its origins in the late 19th century. Its first director, Jabez Gadsden, had arrived in Australia from England in 1879. One of his early jobs was working for bag manufacturer Joseph Joyce in Melbourne. Gadsden was made partner in Joyce's business in 1884, however in 1889 the partnership was dissolved by mutual agreement and Gadsden became the sole proprietor. The company later expanded its activities from bag manufacture to can-making and eventually general packaging materials. The J. Gadsden company stayed in the Gadsden family after the death of Jabez Gadsden in 1936. (Feldmann 1980)

The purchase of land in Coburg for the construction of a new factory was part of a policy of expansion implemented by J. Gadsden Pty Ltd throughout the post-war period. The property was considered a bargain, with 9 ½ acres secured for 850 pounds per acre, and an additional 5 ½ acres acquired for 750 pounds per acre. The factory building was constructed in 1956 and began manufacturing cans in the same year. In 1957 parts of the Coburg plant were modified to accommodate the production of beer cans for the first time in Australia. The first beer cans were delivered by J. Gadsden Pty Ltd in December of that year. (Feldmann 1980)

During the early 1960s the factory at 36-38 Charles was again the subject of modifications, this time to satisfy the requirements of Campbell's Soups, a major new client that had engaged Gadsden to produce its cans. Later, however, operations for the production of Campbell's Soups cans were moved to a factory in Shepparton that had been newly constructed for the purpose. In addition, 1963 saw a Training Centre established at the Coburg Factory to assist in the development of employees' technical skills in a period of rapid technological advancement. (Feldmann 1980)

The Coburg factory's reputation as a site of innovation continued into the 1970s. Gadsden had previously been a leader in steel can production, but with the introduction of aluminium cans to the market, sought to keep up with trends by installing coil cutting machinery capable of making can tops and bottoms in both steel and aluminium. Later, Minster Converter Presses, highly complex machines designed for the production of easy opening can tops for beverages that had previously only been available from America, were introduced to the Coburg plant. (Feldmann 1980) These various developments in the 1960s and 70s are evident in Rate Book records, which show a significant extension of 6440 square feet in 1960, 'factory additions' made in 1972, a compressor room appearing in 1973, laboratory additions in 1974 and an expansion for storage in 1975. (City of Coburg Rate Books)

For much of the mid-twentieth century the J. Gadsden company had factories operating Australia-wide. It is not known at what time the factory 36-38 Charles Street stopped operating as part of the J. Gadsden enterprise, however in 1986 J. Gadsden Pty Ltd was delisted and taken over by SAB Investments Pty Ltd (delisted 2006). The factory continues to be used for the manufacture of food and beverage cans, and is operated by Visy Recycling (Visy 2010)

History
 The Sands & McDougall directory entries for the house at 64-66 Abbotsford Street are unclear. In the 1860s, the house, then unnumbered, appears for the first time and was occupied by John Ramage. In the 1880s, the house and its neighbour at No.68, were known as Rosebank Cottages; in 1885, they were occupied by Frederick Christy and Mrs Rogers.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 64-66 Abbotsford Street is a single-storey, double-fronted Victorian terrace house which forms a pair with the adjacent No. 68. The walls are of rendered masonry gabled corrugated galvanised steel roof. The front elevation has a central door flanked by single timber-framed double-hung sash windows. The skillion-roofed verandah runs between wing walls and has a non-original balustrade and no decoration.

Statement of Significance

The house at 64-66 Abbotsford Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. It is representative of the modest workers' dwellings which were erected in large numbers in North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. Aesthetically, the building is a reasonably intact example of its type and style and contributes to the streetscape.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The house is a reasonably intact example of a modest nineteenth century workers' cottage, which has an historical and visual relationship with its neighbour at No.68.

City of Melbourne Heritage Review (1999) - Allom Lovell and Associates (1999)

History

The Sands & McDougall directory entries for the house at 64-66 Abbotsford Street are unclear. In the 1860s, the house, then unnumbered, appears for the first time and was occupied by John Ramage. In the 1880s, the house and its neighbour at No.68, were known as Rosebank Cottages; in 1885, they were occupied by Frederick Christy and Mrs Rogers.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 64-66 Abbotsford Street is a single-storey, double-fronted Victorian terrace house which forms a pair (sic) with the adjacent No. 68. The walls are of rendered masonry gabled corrugated galvanised steel roof. The front elevation has a central door flanked by single timber-framed double-hung sash windows. The skillion-roofed verandah runs between wing walls and has a non-original balustrade and no decoration.

Statement of Significance

The house at 64-66 Abbotsford Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. It is representative of the modest workers' dwellings which were erected in large numbers in North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. Aesthetically, the building is a reasonably intact example of its type and style and contributes to the streetscape.

Description/Notable Features

A transverse-gable brick, double fronted row house of ruled stucco wall finish and a slated roof with an iron roofed verandah and picketed fence and gate as both the boundary fence and verandah balustrade: this proximity to the street characterises the early construction date repeat in 88,90. It compares with 61 York Street, Fitzroy North (1876); 127 Johnstone Street (c1864) and 83 Hargreaves Street (1860), Castlemaine. Notable features include the verandah detail c 1910.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally it is an early but altered row house of little stylistic distinction, but it possesses an original fence of an unusual type and contributes to an early streetscape: the former of local significance, the latter of regional significance. Historically, of local interest as an early housing group.

Recommended Alterations

Bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) Gable orbs, fence removed (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) Paint in original or typical colours; replace spouting with ogee profile.

Other Comments

Integrity - The verandah has been rebuilt c1910 when a broad-section, cast-iron frieze using curvilinear patterns was introduced. Otherwise the house is relatively original externally, except for paint colours. Streetscape - Part of an early streetscape which is unified by narrow frontages, stucco finish, original fencing and proximity to the street.

Description/Notable Features

A two-storey, ruled stucco finish row house with a transverse gabled and slated roof, a two-level timber post verandah, rare half-panel French doors at the upper and three-pane hung sashes at the lower. Stucco architraves are used at the openings. The house appears to have been cemented after its construction as evidenced by the coarse details of chimney cornice and elsewhere. A picket fence sympathetic to the original exists at the frontage. Notable features include French doors, fence, age - historical significance.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, the original detailing of the architraves, French doors and window panes is relatively unusual and evokes the early date of construction, whilst the house contributes to an early Victorian residential streetscape. Historically, of local interest as part of an early housing group.

Recommended Alterations

Balustrade (sympathetic) Verandah frieze, gate replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) Paint in original or typical colours; investigate reconstruction of verandah; record French doors for restoration data.

Other Comments

Integrity - The timber verandah which appears to have been rebuilt, is without balustrading and decoration. The paint colours have been changed. The house displays original detailing which is synonymous with its age.
Streetscape - Part of an early streetscape which is unified by narrow frontages, stucco finish, original fencing and proximity to the street.

History

Although these houses were built separately, from c1875 they had a common ownership. From 1862, 94 Abbotsford Street was owned and occupied by William Ellis, then Thomas Ellis, until 1875. By then, George Ogilvy had 92 Abbotsford Street built (1873) and he acquired 94 in 1876. From then until 1897, the owners were Mary Smith and James Rogerson.

Description/Notable Features

A face-brick (painted) pair of parapeted, single-fronted row houses with timber posted verandahs, shuttered windows and timber-slatted balustrade fence at the building line. Panelled cast-iron friezes similar to No. 90 are present, without the brackets. A dog-tooth brick string course below a brick cornice adds a typical early detail. As with 90, no chimneys are evident. It is likely that the facades of both were renovated in c1875 by Thomas Ellis, builder or that 92 was built to match 94. Notable features include shutters, verandah, tiles

Integrity - The bricks have been painted, part of 94's fence removed and the cladding removed from the roof of 92; the roof gutter has been replaced and possibly the cast-iron brackets removed. Note: renovation was in progress during survey.

Streetscape - Part of an early streetscape unified by narrow frontages, stucco finish, original fencing and proximity to the street.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, the original shutters, fence and brick dog-toothing are valuable early details and the pair play an important role in this early streetscape: of local importance. Historically, of local interest as part of an early housing group.

Recommended Alterations

Provide ogee gutter; record shutter details for restoration data. Fence (sympathetic - reinstate original design) Bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History
Although these houses were built separately, from c1875 they had a common ownership. From 1862, 94 Abbotsford Street was owned and occupied by William Ellis, then Thomas Ellis, until 1875. By then, George Ogilvy (sic) had 92 Abbotsford Street built (1873) and he acquired 94 in 1876. From then until 1897, the owners were Mary Smith and James Rogerson.

Description
A face-brick (painted) pair of parapeted, single-fronted row houses with timber posted verandahs, shuttered windows and timber-slatted balustrade fence at the building line. Panelled cast-iron friezes similar to No. 90 are present, without the brackets. A dog-tooth brick string course below a brick cornice adds a typical early detail. As with 90, no chimneys are evident. It is likely that the facades of both were renovated in c1875 by Thomas Ellis, builder or that 92 was built to match 94. Notable features include shutters, verandah, tiles

Integrity
The bricks have been painted, part of 94's fence removed and the cladding removed from the roof of 92; the roof gutter has been replaced and possibly the cast-iron brackets removed.
Note: renovation was in progress during survey.

Streetscape
Part of an early streetscape unified by narrow frontages, stucco finish, original fencing and proximity to the street.

Statement of Significance
Architecturally, the original shutters, fence and brick dog-toothings are valuable early details and the pair play an important role in this early streetscape: of local importance.

Description/Notable Features

A pair of two-story, stucco finish row houses with two level cast-iron verandahs and iron picket palisade fencing between stuccoed fence piers. The slated roofs are hipped and exposed above bracketed eaves; the opening heads and segment-arched with drip-moulds providing a Tudor flavour to otherwise Italianate form and detail. Panelled cast-iron friezes and brackets and fringing provide the decoration, whilst six panel doors lend distinction to the detailing.

Notable features include fence, verandah decoration, verandah roof and structure, corner siting

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, the hip roof two-storey row house form is an unusual combination (refer 115-117 George Street, East Melbourne, 1867) both in the study area and Victoria. This is a relatively early and original pair of this type, sparsely decorated as befits its period. Historically, an owner-builder-developer combination, typical of the area: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Balustrade, fence piers altered (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative)

Other Comments Repaint in original or typical colours.

Description/Notable Features

A transverse-gable roofed row of verandahed and single-fronted stucco finished houses, formerly with unusual, Gothic flavoured timber verandah detailing in the form of tracery-like brackets. Notable features include verandah decoration

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, the original Gothic tracery details are rare in small, privately owned domestic buildings (refer to 7 Walker Street, Northcote and 157 Hotham Street, East Melbourne); Gothic detailing being usually in the form of fretted or carved barge-boards: however, this significance pertains only to 175. Historical, of local interest only.

Recommended Alterations

Record the detailing of 175 for possible restoration of 173, 169 and general architectural interest; repaint in original or typical colours; restore fences; restore roofing (169). Verandah, windows, roof (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments Integrity - 173 and particularly 169 have been altered, possessing their form and basic finish: only 175 possesses its original Gothic detailing. The windows of 169 have been replaced with aluminium-framed windows

Integrity - 173 and particularly 169 have been altered, possessing their form and basic finish: only 175 possesses its original Gothic detailing. The windows of 169 have been replaced with aluminium-framed windows with horizontal emphasis, tile profile cladding put on the roof and the verandah rebuilt; 173 is generally original but the tracery is missing. What were presumably timber picket fences have been replaced. Gutters and colours have changed as have other details.

History

An engineer, Robert Hampson had these three houses built in 1865, two of which he leased, the other being his residence until they were sold in 1874. The new owner Thomas Easton (qv) lived in 169 Adderley Street and leased the other two house over the next 20 years or so to such as Richard Boxall, Alexander Galvin and Ellen Callender. R. Hampson was the grantee.

Description

A transverse-gable roofed row of verandahed and single-fronted stucco finished houses, formerly with unusual, Gothic flavoured timber verandah detailing in the form of tracery-like brackets.

Integrity - 173 and particularly 169 have been altered, possessing their form and basic finish: only 175 possesses its original Gothic detailing. The windows of 169 have been replaced with aluminium-framed windows with horizontal emphasis, tile profile cladding put on the roof and the verandah rebuilt; 173 is generally original but the tracery is missing. What were presumably timber picket fences have been replaced. Gutters and colours have changed as have other details.

Significance

Architecturally, the original Gothic tracery details are rare in small, privately owned domestic buildings (refer to 7 Walker Street, Northcote and 157 Hotham Street, East Melbourne); Gothic detailing being usually in the form of fretted or carved barge-boards: however, this significance pertains only to 175. Historical, of local interest only.

Recommendations

Record the detailing of 175 for possible restoration of 173, 169 and general architectural interest; repaint in original or typical colours; restore fences; restore roofing (169).

Description/Notable Features

One-level stuccoed brick, parapeted shop and residence with timber mullioned shop fronts to Adderley and Rodin Streets and part of the original concave roof street verandah which is supported on iron posts and of the Melbourne Corporation design. Stucco detailing is sparse for the construction date being a cornice to the parapet. The shop being built on the frontage, terminates the streetscape of row houses to the south. Notable features include intact shop front, post supported shop verandah
 Statement of Significance

Architecturally, its value is that of a corner-shop-form which is typical of row house suburbs and the verandah lends period variety to the streetscape and thus is of local significance only. It is also representative of the many modest commissions undertaken by W.H. Webb in the area.

Recommended Alterations

Record verandah and shop front details; replace missing verandah; restore doors (presumably half-glazed double doors); repaint in original or typical colours. Signs (inappropriate - reinstate sympathetic alternative)
 Other Comments Integrity - Part of the street verandah has been removed; the entrance doors replaced/altered; an evaporative cooler placed in the highlight and the colours changed.

'CONVICTION OF A PICKPOCKET.

At the Police Court on Saturday a respectably attired and intelligent man named John Gregory, described as a miner, and aged about 40 years, was charged with having stolen from the person of Martha Goldsmith, a widow, residing at West Melbourne, a purse containing between 8s and 9s. The bench consisted of the Mayor (Mr H.

SURVEYED PLACES

Meakin), Mr Heron, P.M., and Messrs Gibson and Miles, JPs The prosecutrix stated that she was a passenger by the steamer Courier during its trip from Melbourne to Geelong on the previous afternoon. Upon the arrival of the vessel at Portarlinton she was about to take on shore one of her daughters, who was in ill-health, when she was informed by a Mrs Ebbott that her pocket had been picked. She immediately put her hand into the pocket and found that her purse, which contained between 8s and 9s, besides the keys of a portmanteau and a tin box, had been stolen. The prisoner was pointed out to her, and she accused him of the theft. He denied it, but subsequently said that if he were to give her the money it would be admitting that he was guilty, Elizabeth Mary Ebbott, a married woman, living at Long Gully, Sandhurst, gave evidence that she was on the steamer when the theft was committed.

She saw the prisoner stand close to Mrs Goldsmith and draw from her pocket a purse. Looking towards witness he saw that he had been observed, and approaching her he said, "Is this Geelong ? " Witness replied in the negative, and said that he knew it was not Geelong. She then informed her husband of the theft, and told him to watch Gregory ; and subsequently she asked Mrs Goldsmith to see whether anything had been taken from her pocket. The prosecutrix immediately found that her purse had been stolen. In the meantime prisoner had gone below. Philip Henry Ebbott, husband of the previous witness, and who is a coach builder by trade, identified the prisoner, and stated that he had followed him to the lower part of the steamer. He informed the captain and other officers of the theft, and Gregory was eventually discovered in one of the water closets, Corroborative evidence was given by James Smith, second officer of the Courier ; and Constable Brady stated that the man was given into his custody by Mr Munro, the first officer, upon the arrival of the boat at Geelong. Seniors constable McGreal said that, after being locked up, Gregory intimated that he was a resident of Peel-street, Ballarat, and followed the occupation of a miner. The Ballarat police were communicated with, and that (Saturday) morning a telegram had been received from them stating that no person named Gregory lived in the street named. The prisoner reiterated that he lived in Peel-street. He said that the case was one of mistaken identity!

that he was ill on the afternoon, in question, and kept in the lower part of the vessel throughout the voyage. He was certainly not on the upper deck when the theft was alleged to have taken place, When Mrs Goldsmith accused him she stated that between 7s and 8s had been stolen from her, but in evidence she had said that 8s or 9s were in the purse taken from her pocket. The bench enquired whether the purse and its contents had been found, but the police replied in the negative, remarking that it had probably been thrown into the water when prisoner went below finding that he had been detected. In answer to Mr Heron, the accused said he would prefer to be dealt summarily with, rather than be committed for trial, as he had already been subjected to enough trouble over the matter. Gregory was sentenced to three months imprisonment, and the Mayor said that the bench would like to have made it six months. Before the proceedings closed Mr Heron observed that it was fortunate, for the sake of justice, that such witnesses as Mr and Mrs Ebbott had been obtained in the case.'

Description/Notable Features

The house at 193 Adderley Street is a single-storey, single-fronted Victorian cottage. The walls are of brick, now painted, and it has a transverse gabled roof clad in corrugated galvanised steel and penetrated by a central chimney with a moulded capping. The skillion-roofed verandah terminates at wing walls which have decorative console brackets. The facade has a timber-panelled entry door with fanlight, and the window is a timber-framed double-hung sash with decorative shutters. The metal fence is not original.

Statement of Significance The house at 193 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. Reasonably intact, the house is representative of the type of modest workers' cottages which were constructed in large numbers in North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period.

History

The house at 199 Adderley Street was built c.1871. It is first listed in the Sands & McDougall directory in 1872, when it was occupied by Richard Cullen, who remained there until 1878, when he was succeeded by James Soutter, a stevedore.

Description/Notable Features

The house at 199 Adderley Street is a single-storey, single-fronted bichromatic brick Victorian cottage. Walls are of tuck-pointed reddish-brown brick with cream brick dressings to openings, and the transverse gabled roof is clad in corrugated galvanised steel. The verandah terminates at wing walls with rendered parapets, and has cast iron decoration. The entry door is timber-panelled with a fanlight, and the window is a timber-framed double-hung sash. The picket fence is recent.

Statement of Significance

The house at 199 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. It is representative of the modest worker's cottage which were constructed in large numbers in North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. It is an intact example of its type which retains its original tuckpointed bichromatic brickwork.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. Since the previous study (10/1/1985), the paint has been removed from the facade, enhancing the appearance and streetscape contribution of the house. In addition, an earlier brick fence has been replaced with a timber picket fence. The houses relates visually and historically to its neighbours.

History

The house at 201 Adderley Street was built c.1907. The Sands & McDougall directory for 1908 lists the house as 'vacant', while the following year the occupant is listed as Henry Remfry.

Description/Notable Features

The house at 201 Adderley Street is a single-storey single-fronted Edwardian brick cottage. The walls are of red brick with a cream brick string course at sill level, and the hipped roof is clad in slate with fish scale patterning. The verandah has a corrugated galvanised steel skillion-profile roof with cast iron decoration. The facade has a timber-panelled door with a glazed upper panel, and a pair of timber-framed double-hung sash windows. The timber picket fence is not original.

Statement of Significance

The house at 201 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The house is a late example of the small brick cottages which were constructed in large numbers in North and West Melbourne in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Aesthetically, the house is an interesting and intact combination of Victorian and Edwardian elements.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. Since the previous study (10/1/1985), the paint has been removed from the facade, enhancing the appearance and streetscape contribution of the house. In addition, an earlier wire fence has been replaced with a timber picket fence.

The terrace at 217-221 Adderley Street was built c.1887. The Sands & McDougall directory for 1887 list one house on the site, occupied by Alexander E Massey. The following year, four properties are listed on the site: three are listed as vacant and one occupied by Henry Watson. The directories for 1888 list the occupants of the three new houses as Otto Faulwasser, Mrs Catherine Corcoran and Harry Walking.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 217-221 Adderley Street is a row of single-storey, single-fronted terrace houses. The walls are of rendered masonry and the transverse gabled roofs have bracketed eaves. The verandahs terminate at wing walls with consoles. Each facade has a timber-panelled door, and a single timber-framed double-hung sash window. Nos. 219 and 221 retain their original cast iron fences, whilst that at No. 217 is not original.

Statement of Significance

The houses at 217-221 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, are of local historical and aesthetic interest. The terrace is typical of the modest housing which was constructed in the nineteenth century Boom period, an important phase in the development of North and West Melbourne. Aesthetically, the houses are substantially intact and make a positive contribution to the mixed streetscape.

'The Nuptial Knot

The marriage of Miss Sarah, second daughter of Mr Joshua Proud, of "Tyns House," Adderley-street, West Melbourne, to Mr James Lawrence. of (Coolgardie, was celebrated on Tuesday last, October 1st, at the residence of the bride's parents, the Rev Dr Strong officiating. The bridesmaids were the four sisters of the bride Mr John Lawrence was "best man"; and the bride was given away by her father.

After the ceremony the company assembled at the Mechanics Hall Errol-street where the Wedding-breakfast was laid, in Mr Hunter's very best -style, which, is proof positive of excellence, nothing that could tempt the most delicate palate being absent. About 100 guests partook of the repast; and the customary complimentary speeches were made and responded to in the usual way. The only incident which could be said to have a saddening effect upon the relatives of both parties was the fact of the young couple's early departure for the "Golden west"; but if the kind prayers of their friends are granted, fortune will smile upon them in the land of their adoption. The speeches, in view of their departure at no distant date, naturally partook of a valedictory character, and the evident reluctance shown on both sides at mention of parting, was, perhaps, the greater compliment that could be paid them. After supper the tables were cleared away, and the dancers at once took possession of the floor, and did not quit till well towards morning. Appended we give a list of the costumes:

The Bride looked charming in a hand some cream cashmere, relieved with cream brocade and satin, crowned-with the usual wreath and -veil, and shower bouquet. The four bridesmaids were attired in buttercup cashmere, relieved with figured silk to match.....'

 History

The terrace at 217-221 Adderley Street was built c.1887. The Sands & McDougall directory for 1887 list one house on the site, occupied by Alexander E Massey. The following year, four properties are listed on the site: three are listed as vacant and one occupied by Henry Watson. The directories for 1888 list the occupants of the three new houses as Otto Faulwasser, Mrs Catherine Corcoran and Harry Walking.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 217-221 Adderley Street is a row of single-storey, single-fronted terrace houses. The walls are of rendered masonry and the transverse gabled roofs have bracketed eaves. The verandahs terminate at wing walls with consoles. Each facade has a timber-panelled door, and a single timber-framed double-hung sash window. Nos. 219 and 221 retain their original cast iron fences, whilst that at No. 217 is not original.

Statement of Significance

The houses at 217-221 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, are of local historical and aesthetic interest. The terrace is typical of the modest housing which was constructed in the nineteenth century Boom period, an important phase in the development of North and West Melbourne.

Aesthetically, the houses are substantially intact and make a positive contribution to the mixed streetscape.

The marriage of Miss Sarah, second daughter of Mr Joshua Proud, of "Tyns House," Adderley-street, West Melbourne,

the Rev Dr Strong officiating. The bridesmaids were the four sisters of the bride Mr John Lawrence was "best man"; and the bride was given away by her father.

After the ceremony the company assembled at the Mechanics Hall Errol-street where the Wedding-breakfast was laid, in Mr Hunter's very best -style, which, is proof positive of excellence, nothing that could tempt the most delicate palate being absent. About 100 guests partook of the repast; and the customary complimentary speeches were made and responded to in the usual way. The only incident which could be said to have a saddening effect upon the relatives of both parties was the fact of the young couple's early departure for the "Golden west"; but if the kind prayers of their friends are granted, fortune will smile upon them in the land of their adoption. The speeches, in view of their departure at no distant date, naturally partook of a valedictory character, and the evident reluctance shown on both sides at mention of parting, was, perhaps, the greater compliment that could be paid them. After supper the tables were cleared away, and the dancers at once took possession of the floor, and did not quit till well towards morning. Appended we give a list of the costumes:

Originally one of a pair known as Blantyre Cottages, the house at 250 Adderley Street was constructed in 1872. It is described in the 1872 rate books as a three-room brick house 'being erected' owned by a Mr Staker (sic). The rate books for the following year show the owner as John McInnes. McInnes lived in No. 248 (now demolished) and whilst the present house was occupied by a Mr Mudge (?). Each had an Average Annual Value of 20 pounds.

Description/Notable Features

The house at 250 Adderley Street is a single-storey, single-fronted Victorian cottage. The walls are of rendered masonry, and the transverse gabled roof is clad in corrugated galvanised steel. The verandah has cast iron decoration and terminates at rendered wing walls. The facade has an entrance door and a single timber-framed double-hung sash window. The fence is not original.

Statement of Significance The house at 250 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The house, which originally formed a pair with No. 248 (now demolished) is representative of the speculatively-built modest housing which was constructed throughout North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. Aesthetically, the house is reasonably intact, and despite the demolition of its pair, remains an interesting element in the streetscape, relating visually to the pair at Nos.252-254.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The house remains representative of modest nineteenth century workers' housing in West Melbourne.

City of Melbourne Heritage Review (1999)

History

Originally one of a pair known as Blantyre Cottages, the house at 250 Adderley Street was constructed in 1872. It is described in the 1872 rate books as a three-room brick house 'being erected' (sic) owned by a Mr Staker (sic). The rate books for the following year show the owner as John McInnes. McInnes lived in No. 248 (now demolished) and whilst the present house was occupied by a Mr Mudge (?). Each had an Average Annual Value of 20 pounds.

Description

The house at 250 Adderley Street is a single-storey, single-fronted Victorian cottage. The walls are of rendered masonry, and the transverse gabled roof is clad in corrugated galvanised steel. The verandah has cast iron decoration and terminates at rendered wing walls. The facade has an entrance door and a single timber-framed double-hung sash window. The fence is not original.

Significance

The house at 250 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The house, which originally formed a pair with No. 248 (now demolished) is representative of the speculatively-built modest housing which was constructed throughout North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. Aesthetically, the house is reasonably intact, and despite the demolition of its pair, remains an interesting element in the streetscape, relating visually to the pair at Nos.252-254.

Grading review

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The house remains representative of modest nineteenth century workers' housing in West Melbourne.

Description/Notable Features

A simple single fronted row house, typical of the small residential accommodation in the southern portion of North Melbourne. Built after the c1896 MMBW survey, its paired narrow windows are typical of buildings constructed in the first two decades of the twentieth century. The cast iron, which appears to be original, incorporates a less common radial pattern to the brackets. A stage parapet provides a vertical emphasis and conceals the gable roof to the house. The windows and door fenestration is substantially intact, with typical, double hung windows and panelled front door. The verandah roof and cast iron appear to be original. Some alterations may have occurred to the parapet, the fence is altered and the brickwork is painted, however, the significant elements of the early twentieth century house remain.

Statement of Significance

This section of Adderley Street combines with Hawke and Roden Streets, to form a pocket of more concentrated workers housing in the industrial framework. The integration of housing and industrial uses is typical of the historic pattern of mixed use in West Melbourne. The period, form, setback and scale contribute to the historic residential portion of West Melbourne.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments This building illustrates the integration of workers housing and industrial activity in West Melbourne. It contributes to a group in the surrounding area. Upgrading to D recommended.

The houses at 257-261 Adderley Street comprise three of a terrace of four known as Fryth's Cottages. The Sands & McDougall directory suggest the terrace was constructed in stages from c.1876. Two cottages are listed in the 1877 directory as occupied by William Frederick and a Mrs McGuire. The 1878 directory lists 'Fryth's Cottages 1-3', occupied by French, Thomas Goldsworthy, an engineer, and a Mr Peacock. By 1881, the four cottages had been constructed and they were occupied by French, Edwards...

Description/Notable Features

The houses at 257-261 Adderley Street comprise three of four single storey, single-fronted Victorian terrace houses. The walls are of rendered masonry, and the transverse gabled roof is clad in corrugated galvanised steel. The verandahs are terminated by rendered wing walls with rendered consoles, and have cast iron decoration. The facades have timber-panelled entry doors with fanlights, and the windows to Nos. 257 and 261 are timber-framed double-hung sashes. The windows to No. 259 probably dates from the inter-War period. No. 261 retains its original iron picket fence.

Statement of Significance

The houses at 257-261 Adderley Street, West Melbourne, are of local historical and aesthetic interest. They are representative of the modest cottages which proliferated in North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. Aesthetically, the houses are reasonably intact Victorian terrace houses which is an important group within the streetscape.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The houses are reasonably intact representatives of their style and type. The individual value of the houses is reinforced by the collective group. The alterations are minor in nature and reversible.

Description/Notable Features

Owner-builder, William French constructed this two-storey, stuccoed brick house, with a parapeted roof line and arcaded ground-level. Cast-iron columns support three arches, with drip-moulds, above which an incised string-frieze marks the storey-line: two flat-pedimented and architraved windows, and a parapet cornice follow. An iron picket fence is used at the frontage. Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration, elaborate/high standard design of cement rendered surfaces, arcaded verandah, iron columns, fanlight to doorway

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, marks the early part of the period of Italian Romanesque/Renaissance influence on Melbourne Architecture, with the relatively uncommon arcaded form and is near original: of regional significance. Historically, the best of a number of buildings by French at this corner, and thus typifying the predominance of builder-owners in West and North Melbourne: of local importance.

Recommended /Alterations

Windows replaced (sympathetic - reinstate original design) mural to side wall (inappropriate) Retain street party mural and colour scheme as desired: consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to preserve residential use and form.

Other Comments

Mural painted by owner c.1975-6. (Lewis). Integrity - Generally original; one chimney cornice has been removed; mural non-period for residence, but general scheme is sympathetic. Streetscape - Common finish, detail and set back to 257-261, also a corner building.

Anti-nuclear movement in Australia
From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Nuclear weapons testing, uranium mining and export, and nuclear power have often been the subject of public debate in Australia, and the anti-nuclear movement in Australia has a long history. Its origins date back to the 1972–73 debate over French nuclear testing in the Pacific and the 1976–77 debate about uranium mining in Australia.[4][5]

Several groups specifically concerned with nuclear issues were established in the mid-1970s, including the Movement Against Uranium Mining and Campaign Against Nuclear Energy (CANE), cooperating with other environmental groups such as Friends of the Earth and the Australian Conservation Foundation.[6][7] The movement suffered a setback in 1983 when the newly elected Labor Government failed to implement its stated policy of stopping uranium mining.[8] But by the late 1980s, the price of uranium had fallen, the costs of nuclear power had risen, and the anti-nuclear movement seemed to have won its case; CANE was disbanded in 1988.[9]

About 2003, proponents of nuclear power advocated it as a solution to global warming and the Australian government began taking an interest. Anti-nuclear campaigners and some scientists in Australia argued that nuclear power could not significantly substitute for other power sources, and that uranium mining itself could become a significant source of greenhouse gas emissions.[10][11]

`A Breach of Promise Case.

The parties in a breach of promise case at Melbourne were a widow named Emily Leeds, of West Melbourne, who claimed £500 damages from a widower named John Greenwood, of Abbotsford, gentleman. Plaintiff gave her age as 55, and defendant his as 64. Both had grown-up daughters.

The widow said that she met Greenwood in a train going to Sydney in July last year. When all the passengers got out at Moss Vale for refreshments, they were left alone, and the stranger opened conversation with her upon being asked to share some tea she had in a jug. The acquaintance ripened, and at Redfern station plaintiff and her mother-in law helped defendant to obtain lodgings. He used to have breakfast at the tatter's house nearly every day. Returning to Melbourne a few weeks later, the pair met again, and Greenwood proposed marriage, which was accepted. He said he had 16 houses, and would comfortably keep her. They went together one Sunday to the Sailors' Home Mission, where defendant was organist, but his daughter finding out that plaintiff was a Wesleyan, preferred that he should marry a lady of his own church, although plaintiff agreed to join the mission. Defendant in November last finally said he would not marry.

Cross-examined, Mrs. Leeds said her husband had been dead three years.

Were you going to marry Greenwood for love, or his 16 cottages?-I felt as lonely as he did.

Were you fond of him?-I had hardly time to get fond of him.

Well, where do your injured feelings come in?--He made a fool of me in the eyes of my relatives.

Defendant denied having proposed marriage.

Be became acquainted with plaintiff in the in the manner described, and on one occasion when she was ill visited her in a bedroom at her house. While there she asked him if he thought he would ever get married again. He replied, "I have turned 70." Plaintiff added, " I don't think you are too old. My late husband was much older." She frequently asked him to take her for a drive. When he was leaving her on the occasion of his visit she raised herself up in bed and he knew that she wanted a kiss. (Laughter.) He admitted saying that if he did get married he had plenty of means to live on, but he did not say that he would get married. He told plaintiff once that she would look much better if she got some teeth in. " You know," added witness, " she had only one tooth sticking out in front." (Laughter).

At the close of the judge's summing up the jury, without leaving the box, returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, for whom judgment was entered with costs.'

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)History

In 1888, John Greenwood a contractor, built this house in which he then resided for at least the following ten years. Greenwood also owned and built other properties in the area.

Description

A two-storey, parapeted stuccoed brick house with a two-level cast-iron verandah which is sited parallel to the frontage, facing the bay. One verandah roof is a bullnose profile whilst the iron is ornate. In contrast. the corniced and parapeted form is typical of earlier buildings in its austerity of ornament: the rectangular parapet entablature, which bears the house name, as a central acroterion with scrolls. Openings are architrave, whilst some possess six-pane sashes.

Integrity

Generally original, the fence has been replaced (possibly timber picket adjoining a capped corrugated iron fence). Part of the iron is missing and the side-wall face brick painted: colours are sympathetic.

Streetscape

Not in parallel with other buildings, but instead, in counterpoint by the siting and prominent corner siting.

Significance

Architecturally, because of its austere and typical form, it achieves importance more so from its unusual siting, original detail and prominent position: of regional importance.

Historically, another of the owner-builder developers of Adderley Street (Refer William French and Henry Cropley) and the area generally: in this case, building a large house as a mark of success -of regional importance.

Recommendations

Replace missing iron; consider removal of paint from brickwork; consider repainting trim in original or typical colours; investigate replacement of fences as under Integrity; consider rezoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2 to preserve residential use and form.

History

This old church was preceded, in Victoria, by only a small wooden hut built with the help of contributions from various denominations and initially also used by them. The new St. James' church was built on a crown grant site near the corner of William and Little Collins Streets, where the foundation was laid by His Honour Charles Latrobe, Superintendent of the District of Port Phillip, on November 9, 1839. The Diocese of Melbourne was founded in 1847 and on June 29, St. Peter's Day, Charles Perry was consecrated in Westminster Abbey as Melbourne's first Bishop. Arriving, he was enthroned in St. James' on January 28, 1848 and St. James' Church became the first Cathedral Church of the new diocese, though not consecrated until 1853. Two other bishops, Bishops Moorhouse and Goe, were later installed in St. James' while it retained its Cathedral status. The new St. Paul's Cathedral was opened for worship on January 22, 1891 and St. James' reverted to the status of parish church. Its congregation was very small, it occupied valuable city land, and maintenance was very costly, so that in the following years the building narrowly escaped demolition. However it was eventually decided to move the Old Cathedral to its present site where it was re-consecrated by Archbishop Lowther Clarke and re-opened for worship on April 19, 1914. The church was carefully reconstructed, stone by numbered stone, and is substantially in its original form. The tower was shortened by one stage and its entrance moved to face King Street. The main ceiling was lowered a little for structural reasons, and the sanctuary unfortunately shortened by a few inches. The shape of the latter was further married by later reinforcements. The space beneath the main gallery was remodelled to form a lobby and two vestries with passage and gallery stairs behind them. Two side entrances were constructed to serve the new passage.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence. Sympathetic garden / paving. Interior / fittings.

Melbourne's 'oldest' building. (Re-erected 1913) - first cathedral. Interesting features of the church. The Galleries : The unusual side galleries, or Vice-Regal boxes, were originally for the use of Governor Latrobe and the Chief Justice respectively, and have since been occupied by Governors General, Royalty and other notables. They at present house the organ pipes. The main gallery was added in 1853 in order to increase the capacity of the cathedral. Communion Rail : The fine cedar communion rail is of unusual curved design. Pews : The box pews are of cedar and numbered in the old manner for rental, No. 10 was the Henty Family pew, but was subsequently used by a City Councillor for whose corpulence provision had to be made. Sedilia : The bishop's sedilia can no longer be contained in the altered sanctuary, and stands against the right hand wall in the chancel. Pulpits : The two pulpits designed for preaching and reading are of solid mahogany and were presented by the ladies of the congregation in 1847. One was sold in 1901 and replaced by a conventional lectern. It was recovered, with difficulty, in recent years. Baptismal Font : The white marble bowl, probably of the 17th Century, came from St. Katherine's Abbey on the banks of the Thames. That building was demolished in 1837. Friends of Governor Latrobe acquired the font and it was necessary to have Queen Victoria's permission before it could be brought to Victoria. The fine canopy and pedestal were designed in Melbourne and presented by parishioners. The Organ : Two successive organs occupied, approximately, the present position of the font. The second, by Fincham, was placed in the front of the church when the church was moved. It was rebuilt in 1962, but is now worn out. Great effort is needed to finance the purchase of a new one. Entrance and Bells : The present main entrance to the Old Cathedral is through the base of the

Statement of Significance

Mr. Robert Russell, a London architect and surveyor, designed the building in Colonial Georgian style. The foundations are of bluestone, and the main walls of a sandstone found in various nearby quarries. The unfinished building was opened for worship on October 2, 1842 and completed in 1847. Melbourne's oldest building, it was originally sited at the corner of Collins and Williams Streets and moved to its present location in 1913. Designed by Robert Russell, the surveyor of Melbourne, it was built in stages between 1839-51 with some design amendments in its later stages by Charles Laing. Although partially modified during its re-location, it remains as the only surviving example of Russell's architectural work and as a monument to the foundation of the city.

What is significant?

St James Old Cathedral was constructed on a Crown grant site of 5 acres of land bounded by Collins, William and Bourke Streets with the foundation stone being laid on 9 November 1839 by Charles Joseph La Trobe, Superintendent of the District of Port Phillip. A simple timber pioneer church which preceded it was built with funds largely subscribed by Presbyterians and other denominations who made up the small community. Opened on 11 February 1837, St James was designed by Robert Russell, a London architect and surveyor who had arrived in Melbourne from Sydney on 5 October 1836. The Colonial Georgian building was constructed on bluestone footings of locally quarried sandstone. The unfinished building was opened for worship on 2 October 1842, and it was completed in 1847. The Anglican Diocese of Melbourne was founded in 1847, and on 29 June 1847 Charles Perry was consecrated in Westminster Abbey as Melbourne's first Bishop. He was enthroned in St James on 28 January 1848, and St James became the first Cathedral church of the new diocese, although it was not consecrated until 1853. When St Paul's Cathedral opened for worship on 22 January 1891 St James reverted to the status of a parish church. The diminished congregation, pressure of occupying valuable city land, and maintenance problems resulted in the church narrowly escaping demolition. It was relocated stone by numbered stone to its present site under the direction of Messrs Thomas Watts and Son, architects, re-consecrated by Archbishop Lowther Clark, and re-opened for worship on 19 April 1914. Changes made to the original design at the time of relocation include reorientation from east west to north south, the tower shortened by one stage, the main ceiling lowered a little, the sanctuary shortened by a few inches, the space between the main gallery remodelled to form a lobby and two vestries with passage and gallery stairs behind them. Two side entrances were constructed to serve the new passage.

How is it significant?

St James Old Cathedral is of historical and architectural significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

It is of historical importance as the first Cathedral in Melbourne, the earliest surviving church in Victoria, and one of Melbourne's earliest surviving buildings. It is of architectural importance as a rare example in Melbourne of a Colonial Georgian style building of simple design and pleasing proportions with Greek detailing at the doorways, and the only known surviving work of architect Robert Russell. Although he worked in London with eminent English architect John Nash, the style reflects his experiences in Sydney, especially the work of his contemporary Francis Clarke as well as of Francis Greenway. The interior is important for rare and unusual features for Victoria, such as the traditional box pews of cedar, side galleries or Vice-Regal boxes originally for the use of Governor La Trobe and the Chief Justice, Baptismal font with the white marble bowl probably dating from the 17th century and coming from St Katherine's Abbey on the banks of the Thames, two mahogany pulpits presented by the ladies of the congregation in 1847. GOLLIN AND COMPANY BUILDING

561-563 BOURKE STREET MELBOURNE, Melbourne City

Victorian Heritage Register

Statement of Significance

Last updated on - December 13, 1999

`What is significant?

The Former Gollin and Company Building was designed by Charles D'Ebro and built in 1902 by Clements Langford. It is a five storey building, constructed of load-bearing brick with steel floor joists. It is decorated with stucco details, including elaborate main door and window surrounds, gables, and string courses at impost and sill heights.
Features of the exterior are the corner sign surround front door case with a swan-neck pediment, metal eaves brackets and particularly the tourelle, which has an elaborately decorated base, foliated band, windows of different shapes and a flagpole-capped cupola.

How is it significant?

The Former Gollin and Company Building is of architectural and historical significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The Former Gollin and Company Building is of architectural significance as a now-rare example of a Queen Anne-style commercial building in Melbourne which possesses a number of distinctive features. It is a rather late example of the Queen Anne style, this particular form of architectural expression flourishing only briefly from the late-1880s. But perhaps because of this belatedness, the Gollin building displays the full development of the style. The use of the corner tourelle as the principal facade feature appeared in England in the 1890s, but the premature demise of the Queen Anne style's popularity amidst the collapse of the property market in the 1890s depression in Melbourne meant that it was an uncommon architectural feature here. The Gollin Building's tourelle is one of the very few, and perhaps most intact, surviving in this city. The diverse range of stylistic elements upon which the Queen Anne style drew is illustrated in this building particularly in the windows.
The ground floor windows in particular are uncommon, while the first floor openings have a classical flavour and those on the second floor exhibit eclectic French Renaissance Revival traits. The upper two floors are more restrained. The Gollin building is, in sum, a skilled composition making great use of its corner site.

The Former Gollin and Company Building is of architectural significance as the work of Charles D'Ebro, an important member of Melbourne's architectural community from the 1880s until his death in 1920. D'Ebro won many awards and designed numerous important buildings. He was also a leading civil engineer and a surveyor. Some of his better known works include Princes Bridge, Georges in Collins Street, Prahran Market and Stonnington.

SURVEYED PLACES

The Former Gollin and Company Building is of historical significance as an illustration of a successful general merchant and import firm of the late-19th and early 20th centuries. Gollin and Company had a diverse business, handling kerosene and oil distribution and shipment of fruit from Mildura to England, amongst other activities. The substance and impressiveness of this building was a specific expression of the company's prosperity and importance, and a general indication of the revived Victorian economy in the first decade of the 20th century, after the 1890s depression, and of the importance of import companies to an economy with limited industrial capacity.'

MELBOURNE.-Imposing a fine of £22, with £1/11/6 costs, on a can manufacturer, who was charged at the North Melbourne Court today with having closed his factory on December 31, Mr. Hill. P.M., said that men of this type should not think they could do as they liked when the Government made regulations to direct the nation's war effort.

Defendant was Ernest Meissner, trading as Excelsior Manufacturing Works at West Melbourne.

In evidence. Meissner said that he had given instructions for the factory to be open at 7.45 a.m. each day during the holiday period and his employees had not come to work. Leslie Stewart said that because of tinplate shortages, no work, except cleaning, could have been done if the men had attended.'

Keep Bros & Wood workshop and showroom, later Stramit Building

96-102 Franklin Street

`What is significant?

The wholesale ironmongers and coach builders, Keep Bros & Wood, commissioned this workshop in 1903 from builders, Murray & Crow of East Melbourne, to a characteristically bold classical revival design by architect DC Askew. From the role of carriage builders, the firm entered the motor trade in the early 20th century as agents for a number of locally made cars, Trumbull being one, and were producers of the Hallmark bicycle.

John Francis Keep died 22 January 1945, aged 89. With his brother, Albert Edward Keep, and H. S. Wood, he had formed Keep Bros and Wood in 1899, after a partnership with his brother (Edward Keep and Co.) formed after his arrival in the Colony in 1876. This company moved from Lonsdale Street to Franklin Street under the style of Keep Bros & Wood. Keep Brothers & Wood's association with carriage and later motor car fabrication and selling, is part of the transition of this part of the Capital City Zone from its typical late Victorian-era use for metalwork and engineering, as observed by Graeme Davison in his work 'Marvellous Melbourne'. This evolutionary grouping of similar land uses has been identified as a significant feature of Melbourne's business district.

A Victorian sesquicentenary plaque on the building commemorates James Harrison the 'investor of the refrigeration process and found of the Victorian Ice Works on this site 1859'.

Rising to five levels (three upper levels and attic), the workshop façade is composed in three parts, each having a deeply moulded gabled pediment at the parapet level and the central and largest bay rising above the others to form a strongly shaped façade silhouette. The flanking bay parapets have minor pediments set on three parapet piers. Ground floor Tuscan order pilasters frame a central entry (with related panelled entry doors), deeply set display windows and an altered vehicle entry. Upper level windows are closely spaced and deep-set, each with timber double-hung sashes. The structural frame is of iron columns and girders.

The street elevation is little changed with the addition of the roller shutter at the carriage way being the main alteration.

How is it significant?

The Keep Bros & Wood workshop and showroom is significant historically and aesthetically to the Melbourne Capital City Zone

SURVEYED PLACES

Why is it significant?

Keep Bros & Wood workshop and showroom is significant aesthetically as a well-preserved and boldly executed Mannerist cemented façade, characteristic of Askew's work.

Historically the long association with the rising firm of Keep Brothers & Wood is significant for their association with carriage and later motor car fabrication and selling, as part of the transition of this part of the Capital City Zone from its late Victorian-era use pattern of 'metals and engineering'.

'MOTOR' HEARSE.

The handsome motor hearse recently acquired by Messrs. A. F. Weight & Sons was driven from Melbourne to its new garage in Horsham yesterday. by Mr. Geo. Weight. The bodywork was built solely in Melbourne to the order of the. Canada Motor & Cycle Co. by Messrs. Keep Bros. & Wood. An extended "Dodge" chassis -supports the imposing superstructure, which is enamelled in royal blue with light blue dressings. The glass panels are embossed in white and gold and the repository is handsomely finished in oak. The proprietary is to be complimented on their enterprise in keeping their plant and equipment up to date in accordance with modern funeral custom. The hearse and coaches previously in use have been retained, and the new provision will be available forthwith for those who desire to utilise it.'

'Films for Motor Trade

A special programme of films of particular interest to the motor trade attracted an audience which filled the Comedy Theatre last night. The entertainment was sponsored by Brooklands Accessories Pty. Ltd. and Keep Brothers and Wood Pty. Ltd. The pictures screened included views of last year's Indianapolis 500 miles race, won by Louis Mayer, who covered the course at an average speed of 109 miles an hour; the making of its spark plug, and "Thrills and Spills," an exciting film, showing smashes in motor-car racing.'

History

The Keep Bros & Wood factory was constructed c.1910 for this company, listed in the 1901 Sands & McDougall directory as coachbuilders, ironmongers and importers, operating from Franklin Street. The building is first listed in the Sands & McDougall directory in 1911, when the address is listed as 339 Batman Street. By 1945, Keep Bros & Wood, by that time involved in the motor industry, had relocated again, to La Trobe Street, and the Batman Street building was in use as a Training Centre for the Engineers Branch of the Postmaster General's Department.

Description/Notable Features

The building at 55 Batman Street is a four-storey Edwardian warehouse built to the property line. Walls are of red face brick with part-rendered spandrel panels and lintels. The transverse gabled corrugated galvanised steel roof is concealed behind a rendered pedimented parapet bearing the words KEEP BROS AND WOOD PTY LTD in raised rendered lettering. The facade is divided into bays by giant order red brick piers. The windows are timber-framed double-hung sashes, with pairs in the top corners having arched heads. As part of the building's conversion to residential use, steel-framed balconies have been added to the facade, along with a small canopy at the entrance.

Statement of Significance

The former Keep Bros. and Wood factory at 55 Batman Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. Historically, the building is representative of the substantial industrial buildings which were constructed in West Melbourne in the early twentieth century.

Aesthetically, the building is a substantially intact example of an Edwardian industrial building on an impressive scale, and which is a dominant element in the streetscape.

Recommended AlterationsOther Comments

Upgraded from E to D. Since the previous study, the building has been refurbished and converted to residential use, involving the addition of balconies and a small entrance canopy. The building is a dominant element in this part of Batman Street and demonstrates the early twentieth century industrial development in West Melbourne. 'REAL ESTATE AND BUILDING.

SPENCER STREET FACTORY.

Structure for Sands and McDougall.

Extensions to the railway-yards at West Melbourne necessitate the removal of Adderley street to some distance eastward of its present position, and the demolition of the box factory of Sands and McDougall Pty. Ltd. Faced with these changes the firm has decided to erect in Batman street one of the largest factory buildings yet built in Melbourne. The architects for the work are Messrs. Arthur and Hugh L. Peck, of 99 Queen street, who planned the original factory 20 years ago. In going over the old buildings the architects made an interesting comparison of construction costs to-day and 1907. The old building cost £8,000 to build 20 years ago. To erect a similar structure to-day it is estimated would cost £20,000.

The site for the new factory is 173ft. x 161ft. 4in., and the building will be constructed with brick external walls, steel [FACTORY WITH 4½ ACRES OF FLOORS. - illustration] frame and concrete internally, and steel window frames. When completed it will have a floor area of 200,000 square feet, or nearly four and a half acres, contained in a semi-basement and six floors. As the site is surrounded by roads and lanes from all four sides, it will have ample natural light and ventilation. To provide for the placing of heavy printing machinery in any position some of the floors are being constructed to carry the extraordinarily heavy loading of 7cwt. a square foot. A novel feature of the building is its loading facilities, by which the finished articles are discharged by chutes direct into the vans. In every part of the building wash-basins will be placed outside the lavatories, so that the employees after work will be enabled to wash near their machines without undue congestion.'

'The first motor vehicle with an internal combustion engine made in Australia was produced by the Tarrant Engineering Company at South Melbourne in 1901. In 1903 a Tarrant subsidiary, The Melbourne Motor Body Works, was established. Tarrant acquired the Ford agency in 1907 and ceased manufacturing Tarrant cars. The Ford agency was relinquished to the Ford Company of Canada in 1925, and a large factory was built in West Melbourne under the name of Ruskin Motors Pty Ltd, which produced motor bodies from 1925 to 1952 for various makes of cars. In 1905 James Flood, while an employee of Tarrant, made the first fully enclosed passenger car body to be fitted to a motor vehicle in Australia. In 1907 he established his own car body building firm and concentrated first on making custom-built bodies, later moving into bodies produced by assembly line methods.'

'SITE FOR MOTOR WORKS.

2.1/4- Acres in West Melbourne.

The sale of 2.1/4 acres of land in West Melbourne has been negotiated through Messrs Sydney Arnold, Best, and Co, by which the Autocar Industries Proprietary Limited has purchased the freehold of the premises, occupied by the Victoria Iron Rolling Company. The property has a frontage of 430 feet to Dudley street, 180 feet to Adderley street, and 453 feet to Batman street The purchase also includes some adjoining cottages The buyers intend to clear the property of all existing buildings, and to erect an extensive motor-car works in their place.

The Victoria Iron Rolling Company has recently purchased 31 acres of land at West Footscray, close to the terminus of the proposed extension of the Footscray tramways. The company intends to erect a modern plant on this land and on the 58 acres already held adjoining the new property'

'MOTOR-BODY BUILDING.

NEW ASSEMBLING FACTORY.

Flourishing Melbourne Industry.

As a demonstration of the growth of the motor car industry in Victoria, the new body building and assembling factory now being erected in Dudley Street West Melbourne for Autocar Industries Proprietary Limited, will be the second largest in Australia, being exceeded in size only by a similar factory in Adelaide When complete, the new works will have a floor area of 4.1/2 acres. An unusual feature of the building, which will cost more than £100,000, is that advantage is being taken of the slope of the ground to eliminate lifts entirely. Each of its three floors will have an entrance, from the street level, and they will be connected internally by a system of ramps, an arrangement which will be a large factor in economical working and in the reduction of overhead costs. The building will be constructed of brick and reinforced concrete, and so far as is humanly possible will be fireproof. In full working order the factory will give employment to some 250 to 300 men.

It is not generally known that the motor body building industry of Melbourne dates back to 1902, when Mr Alex. Smith, of the Clifton Wheel Works, Clifton Hill, began to build bodies for locally manufactured chassis for the Tarrant Company It is believed that these bodies were some of the first it not the first, constructed in Australia. Shortly afterwards the Tarrant Company procured Mr Smith's services and began to build for themselves. Later the building department grew to such dimensions that a separate organisation, the Melbourne Motor Body Company was formed to cope with the demand. This enterprise has grown into the largest of its kind in the State. The first factory was in Exhibition street, and as it extended was moved first to Carlton and then to larger premises in Little Lonsdale street but the business has now outgrown these making the new works in West Melbourne a necessity.

The new works will mean more to Melbourne than a new factory because at present pressure of orders obliges Autocar Industries Proprietary Limited to place work that cannot conveniently be completed in Melbourne with factories in other State and this congestion of work also makes it necessary for the company to decline orders from outside organisations which are also placed out of Victoria With the new factory in full working the firm will be in a position to conserve all its extra business for Victoria. In addition to this the various departments of the company that are scattered in different suburban will in the future be concentrated under the one roof in West

Melbourne It is the policy of the company to use Australian materials so far as possible and Australian timbers have been found to be specially adapted for body construction. In proof of that assertion the company points with special pride to a closed body designed and constructed in 1907 which has been constantly on the road since then Its upholstery has not been replaced and except for some slight alteration is as it was built and has outlasted three chassis.'

'PAINTING MOTOR BODIES.

Great advance has been made in painting the coach work of cars, and motorists of years' experience will remember that the repainting or revarnishing of their cars meant very often 14 days or three weeks' hold-up. During the visit of press representatives to the new body and assembling works of Allied Motors in West Melbourne last week a demonstration was given which proved the wonderful advance which has taken place by substituting for paint and varnish a product known as Duco. In a small, steel-lined compartment a car ready for painting is: rolled in, and a large centrifugal blower is set in operation to with draw from the compartment the fumes of the colour. With the aid of compressed air operating through a nozzle into which is fed the colour, the body is sprayed almost as quickly as a man can spray a similar area of lawn. The colour dries in half an hour, and the body is ready for its second coat. It was stated that a car which is already coloured with paint and varnish can be Duco finished in two days; while if the car has already been treated with Duco it can be left in the morning and driven home at night in its new colours.

The press representatives were asked to select a partly built body, and in 25 minutes it was nil upholstered. It - would not take long, therefore, to-day for a car; to be repainted and reupholstered.'

'INSTITUTE OF ENGINEERS.

Visit Motor Body Works.

Members of the Victorian Institute of Engineers, together with a party of instructors and pupils of Caulfield Technical School, paid a visit to the Ruskin motor body works in Dudley-street, West Melbourne. They were conducted over the works by Mr. A. O. Mitchell, the general manager. The visitors, as they moved through the various departments, expressed themselves as very pleased 'with the range and quality of Australian workmanship. Among the visiting engineers was Mr. F. C. Hall, president of the institute.'

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Friday 22 July 1938

'AN INVESTOR'S NOTEBOOK

...Manufacturing activity in Australia is at a high level, and gives promise of becoming busier still when the defence programme gets into full swing. Sales of motor-cars also are keeping up very well, and that means that the call for bodies will be sustained...

Allied Motors.

Then there is Allied Motor Interests Ltd., with its Ruskin motor-body works at West Melbourne working on two big contracts for Morris and Hudson-Terra plane cars. The general manager and chief body engineer have been visiting England to investigate latest body production methods with a view to their installation at the company's works. Shareholders are expecting to have a capital reconstruction plan placed before them shortly, and it would not be at all surprising if it embraced proposals for the raising of additional capital to finance expansion at the Ruskin works.'

Uniquecars web site 2015

'Tarrant Motors were the first major Australian automobile operation, being distributors for the De Dion, Argyle, Mercedes, and later Ford. The first bodies to be manufactured in Australia were by Mr. Smith, but as the demand increased his business was absorbed by the Melbourne Motor Body Works, which, by 1918, was building as many as 500 bodies a month. Soon afterward this organisation became Ruskin Motor Bodies Pty. Ltd., which by 1939 was one of the largest motor body building organisations in Australia.'

bmcexperience web site 2015

Victoria: Ruskin Motor Body Works (Dudley St, West Melbourne) built most of the Morris 8/40 bodies for Lanes in Melbourne and Motors in Adelaide. They made bodies for Series I, Series II and Series E roadsters, tourers, saloons and vans, as well as coupe and roadster buckboards (utilities)...The Morris 8/40 was introduced to Australia in early 1935 and was sold in various forms until 1948, at which time the saloons and tourers were replaced with the Issigonis-designed side-valve Morris Minor: which initially used the same engine as the "8".

'Perhaps one of Tarrant's most inspired moves was the purchase of Alex Smith's coach and wheel factory in Clifton Hill in 1906, which he renamed the Melbourne Body Building Co. When Tarrant took the Victorian Ford distribution in 1907 the body building company moved to larger premises, first to Carlton then to Little Lonsdale Street. Eventually, a large modern factory was built in West Melbourne to meet the demand for T Ford bodies in the early 1920s. The firm was then employing 300 men.'

'W Goetz & Sons Ltd Complex (Former)

Address 136-140 Hall Street, Spotswood 1939 HO139

Builder: JG Shillitow

Historical background...

Goetz advertised their wares in newspapers, citing sheet metal working machinery, food processing units, packing machines, canister and can making. Manufactured items included dies, die-sets, jigs, and gauges among their products. The firm was established in 1875 and by the mid twentieth century had works in all states and New Zealand. Other product lines included Bakelite moulds. In the 1960s the company was under the direction of JH Moss (chairman), OT Goetz (deputy chair), JS Moss, PS Moss, RJ Burns, and F Craddock who was also company secretary. The authorised capital was £500,000 and the paid up capital £234,000 (BWWOA, 1964:172)

Why is it Significant?

Historically, it is significant as an intact industrial complex, which demonstrates the scale of development that occurred in Newport and Spotswood during the Interwar period when it became one of the most important and largest industrial centres in Melbourne. (AHC criterion A4 and D2)

Aesthetically, it is significant as a superior and intact example of a Moderne factory building, which is one of the few examples in the municipality. (AHC criteria B2 and E1).'

`The Argus': 25/6/1874

`Certain harbour improvements are now being effected at Williamstown which will provide increased accommodation for shipping in Hobson's Bay. The various incidental works necessary to the perfection of the Alfred Graving Dock are being pushed forward and in a short time those signs of incompleteness now so patent there will be removed. The uprights for the dock workshops are in position on the west side of the dock yard near the engine house. A commencement has also been made with the dock wharf which will be run out on the west side of the caisson.

About 210ft on length on the shore end will be of stone with dressed facings and in addition there will be 333ft. Of a substantial wood pier, some of the piles for which are already driven. The pier will be 31ft 6in in width and it is understood to be intended specially for the accommodation of the P and O Company's steamers. A line of rails will be laid down on the pier communicating with the Victorian Railways so that cargo will be conveyed direct from Spencer street to the ship's side as is now done at the railway pier. When the dock wharf is completed the end berth of the railway pier now occupied by the mail steamers will be available for ordinary use. Mr Alex Cooper is the contractor for this new wharf at £8700 Four large patent capstans are now being fixed in the dock yard, two at the inner and two at the outer end of the dock. The extension of the Ann-street pier now under way will afford much needed accommodation for our coasting vessels. The 300ft of woodwork comprising the present berthage of this wharf is to be renewed by new planking and beams and in addition the wharf is to be extended 201ft. Mr Cooper has also the contract for this work which is to cost £5 400.

This extension will be found of considerable advantage not only on account of the extra berths it will provide but also because of the increased depth of water The water in this locality has shallowed very much of late which is attributed to a great extent to the diversion of the river scour by the new channel at the mouth of the Yarra It is very evident that when these wharves are completed there will be tolerably full work for a dredge in keeping the silt down at the Williamstown piers and in preserving a channel into the Graving Dock...'

`CIVIL SITTINGS BEFORE TRINITY TERM

(Before His Honour Mr Justice Higginbotham and a Special Jury of six)

COOPER V. DANGERFIELD.

Mr. Webb, Q C, and Mr Isaacs for the plaintiff, Mr Madden and Mr Topp for the defendants

The action was brought by Mr. Alex. Cooper, a builder, residing in Capel street, West Melbourne, and the defendants are owners of a foundry adjoining his house.

Plaintiff purchased his land in 1866, and shortly afterwards erected a house upon it. The defendants subsequently put up their foundry, to which they have since made material additions The plaintiff, about a year ago, instituted a suit in equity to restrain the defendants using the foundry in a manner to be hurtful to him, or to his family, or to the house. Mr Justice Molesworth was of the opinion that though there might be some discomfort caused to the plaintiff, but that he had not established the existence of a nuisance ...The plaintiff complained first, of a nuisance caused by soot and smoke from the foundry , second, of a nuisance caused by sparks from the furnace to the plaintiff's premises, thirdly, of a vibration caused by the working of a fan on the defendants' premises , fourthly, of a nuisance caused by a Chilean mill making a noise and causing a vibration in the plaintiff s house, and fifthly, that there was a nuisance caused by the accumulation of soot, &c'

Queries surmised changes in the 1870s effect on façade (1879 NAV rise from £60-80 and added two rooms to description) - believes likely increase in the NAV was a pressed brick wing at the rear:

'Further evidence is,

1. the entry from the bluestone body of the house to the wing is via a low doorway cut through the bluestone and a short low passage. This doorway was obviously forced to be low to dodge (by one cm) the underneath of the existing staircase within the bluestone building. The short passageway was needed to avoid the brick extension cutting across an existing window in the bluestone house.
2. there is a narrow unused chimney inserted in the adjacent wall of 18 Capel which could only have been used to serve an original kitchen lean-to in 16 Capel behind the N-E corner of the bluestone building.
3. the bricks used in the chimney of 16 Capel are hand made, (if pressed bricks were to be used anywhere, they would be used in the chimney.)...

The veranda may in fact have been built at the time of the original bluestone building, because:

- 1 the unique and old nature of the cast iron columns with no allowance for a top row of cast iron to butt into, hence the addition of timber decoration.
- 2 the existence of the same very simple swag belly iron on the balcony (newspaper photo 26-6-76) as at 63 Peel Street - built 1868
- 3 the top of the southern veranda wall before restoration shows no sign of urns '

Cites:

'The Age' 26-6-1976 newspaper clipping asking why City of Melbourne is buying up the block, Peel, Dudley, William, Capel, Victoria Streets, potential for a buffer zone residential redevelopment between North & West Melbourne and the proposed Victoria Market development - shows this house with bellied cast-iron balustrade.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History -Alex Cooper, built, owned and occupied this house from 1865-66 until after 1890. By 1897 William Cooper, also a builder and probably his son, is listed as the owner occupier. 1

Description -A two-storey, unpainted stuccoed stone house with a two-level verandah of timber. supported on slender iron columns. and a stone-piered, iron picket front fence. By the aligned disposition of the openings. on the two levels. and a rise in NAV during 1879, it appears that the house may have been renovated then and the stuccoed facade, verandah and walls added. The stucco detailing consists of a simple cornice, plain curved-topped verandah side-walls and pedestals for urns (now gone). Keyhole pattern fretted verandah valences, in the Gothic manner. is unlikely to be original. as is the balustrade slatting (respaced) but appears more typical of early this century (particularly where the valence is cut around the column capital) •. It is thought that bellied iron balustrade panels were used originally; refer 64 Capel Street. The colour scheme is an old one.

Integrity -Given the above uncertainty. the building appears otherwise original except for missing urns.

Streetscape -An early and contributing part of the Capel Street residential streetscape combining with 18-26 (qv) to present the most original group. in overall appearance within the study area.

Significance -

Architecturally, from at least two stages of construction. this house remains strongly evocative of its generally. early construction period, given the unpainted stucco and old trim colours, also the visible stone work is an uncommon material and the house contributes to a streetscape:

of high regional significance.

Historically, built by the original grantee and an owner-builder typical of the many in the study area and particularly in this street.

Recommendations -Maintain unpainted stucco. by steam cleaning and patching as required; retain existing trim colours or investigate original colours; replace missing urns; consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2 to preserve residential use and form.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History -Alex Cooper, a builder, who was already residing in 16 Capel Street, built these row houses in 1890-91 and proceeded to let them. William Cooper owned them by 1896 when the tenants included Arthur Wragg, an engraver (whose business was in Queen Street); Kate Philip, Robert Glass, William Burt and John Paterson. 1 Cooper was one of the grantees of the lots comprising the site.

Description -A two-level, unpainted stuccoed brick row of five houses with a two-storey ornate cast-iron verandah, a corniced and parapeted roof line, and an iron picket front fence. Ornament consists of panelled party wall- faces, with urns and orbs. The front friezes are panelled with attached finished brackets and posts: the whole being in an early colour scheme. An unusual aspect to the row is the room bay brought forward to the building line at the north end (26), thus unifying the row with the earlier 32-4 (qv).

Integrity -Orbs are missing from 26, 22 and 18, but generally original.

Streetscape -Contributive part of the Capel Street residential streetscape.

Significance -Architecturally, of a common type and a late example but is near intact condition, as exhibited by the unpainted stucco and old colours of the iron. contributive to the streetscape in form, detail and siting as well as being the nearest to original condition in the precinct: of high regional significance. Historically, built by the grantee of 1859 and long-time resident on the site, Alex Cooper, an owner-builder like Touzel, Dean and Noble, all of the same street and era: of regional significance.

Recommendations -Retain unpainted stucco, steam clean, patch as required; retain existing colour scheme or investigate original scheme and repaint; replace details such as the urns and orbs and verandah mouldings (18);consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to preserve residential use and form.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study 1983
 18- 26 Cape1 St reet
 1891, 21 91-5; 1896 , 2209- 13

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983): 18-26 Capel St

History -Alex Cooper, a builder, who was already residing in 16 Capel Street, built these row houses in 1890-91 and proceeded to let them. William Cooper owned them by 1896 when the tenants included Arthur Wragg, an engraver (whose business was in Queen Street); Kate Philip, Robert Glass, William Burt and John Paterson. 1 Cooper was one of the grantees of the lots comprising the site.

Description -A two-level, unpainted stuccoed brick row of five houses with a two-storey ornate cast-iron verandah, a corniced and parapeted roof line, and an iron picket front fence. Ornament consists of panelled party wall faces, with urns and orbs. The front friezes are panelled with attached finished brackets and posts: the whole being in an early colour scheme. An unusual aspect to the row is the room bay brought forward to the building line at the north end (26), thus unifying the row with the earlier 32-4 (qv).

Integrity -Orbs are missing from 26, 22 and 18, but generally original.

Streetscape -Contributive part of the Capel Street residential streetscape.

Significance -Architecturally, of a common type and a late example but is near intact condition, as exhibited by the unpainted stucco and old colours of the iron. contributive to the streetscape in form, detail and siting as well as being the nearest to original condition in the precinct: of high regional significance. Historically, built by the grantee of 1859 and long-time resident on the site, Alex Cooper, an owner-builder like Touzel, Dean and Noble, all of the same street and era: of regional significance.

Recommendations -Retain unpainted stucco, steam clean, patch as required; retain existing colour scheme or investigate original scheme and repaint; replace details such as the urns and orbs and verandah mouldings (18); consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to preserve residential use and form.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)ROB ROY HOTEL

History -This restaurant, former hotel, is another of the buildings in the area constructed and owned by Michael Moran the builder (Refer 162-4 Adderley Street). Soon after its construction in 1871, he sold the hotel to Edward Grieve, the publican at that time being John Connolly. From c1875 it is described as a brick shop and for the twelve years after 1885, it was owned by Elizabeth Johnstone and leased to Mrs. England, -Mrs. Ellingsworth, Mrs. Ward and Perry Moorhouse. 1

Description -A two-storey, stuccoed brick building with a corniced and parapeted roof line, flat window pediments and architraves, a storey string mould and unusual, naively-expressed, scalloped acroteria at the parapet. Coupled upper windows provide the central emphasis to parallel the wide, bracketed and pedimented entrance below (now altered). To the north is a single-level residence which shares simplified moulding lines with its neighbour as well as quoins.
 Integrity -Entrance altered, presumed bipartite like upper window: evaporative cooler added.
 Streetscape -Parallels with 26 of 18-26 Capel Street and in scale to 62-4 and 80-6 Capel Street, whilst form, detail and site disposition are shared with 38, 44-2, 66-78.

Significance -Architecturally, a near original example of a typical early hotel or commercial form with the added unusual detail and fenestration and D an important and early part of the Capel Street residential streetscape: of high regional importance. Historically, a use-pattern which presumably always served as an hotel or boarding house function within this formerly residential street and thus has a focus of social activity: of local importance.

Recommendations -Repaint in original or typical colours; investigate restoration of doorway and relocation of cooler; consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to encourage possible residential use and retain form.

History

The house at 38 Capel Street was constructed c.1872. The rate books are inconclusive as to the exact date of construction. It is one of two adjacent three-room brick houses listed as owned by J Dawson both of which had an Average Annual Value of #28. By 1890, the house was owned by William Willis and occupied by John Schuh, and was rated at £30.

Description/Notable Features

Isabella is a single-storey, single-fronted Victorian brick cottage with a ruled ashlar facade and a transverse gabled slate roof. The concave profile verandah terminates at wing walls, and has unusual timber and cast iron decoration and a tessellated tiled floor. The facade has a door and a single timber-framed double-hung sash window, both with moulded architraves. The cast iron palisade fence is recent.

Statement of Significance

Isabella, at 38 Capel Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The house is representative of the type of small cottages which proliferated in North and West Melbourne in the nineteenth century. Aesthetically, the house is substantially intact and make a positive contribution to the streetscape. It is distinguished from much similarly-scaled building stock in the area by its verandah and architrave details.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments

Upgraded from E to D. The house is a reasonably intact representative of a nineteenth century inner-suburban cottage. Since the previous study, an earlier timber fence has been replaced by an appropriate cast iron palisade fence.

'Architect Victoria'

Winter 2012: 14

'Official Journal of the Australian Institute of Architects Victorian Chapter'

'This was in the Hamer period of Liberal government, as was the infill phase, the next stage in Government housing, at its outset. This saw a complete refocus on the single or two-storeyed house, as a terrace, dropped into a row of other houses, or continuing a suburban street pattern. Here a convergence of later ideas was brought to bear: mixed urban use as prescribed by Jane Jacobs in 1963 seemed more reachable if you integrated new housing visually within older suburbs. And concerns about social stigma of conspicuously different housing projects could be addressed by embedding new houses in established streets. The revision of a-contextual modernism, and its excessive focus on industrial and production imagery, could be addressed by a return to contextual linkage through older and distinctively local textures, colour, material and forms. The Carlton and North Fitzroy housing of Station, Kay, and Canning Streets, the incursions there by Edmond and Corrigan, Greg Burgess, Peter Crone and Norman Day, accompanied by the act of buying older houses (establishing a new social role and meaning in that process).

By 1983-4 this genre had expanded to larger groupings of 26, as with Leo deJong's Public Works development in North Melbourne of up to over 100 or more units; also Cox and Carmichael's Highett development... (image) Capel Street Housing, West Melbourne, Peter Elliott (1988)'

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)

History -This house was built for, or by, Thomas Noble, a carpenter in 1864. He owned and occupied it until after 1882 when other family members, William and James Noble s assumed ownership. Before 1897 s they leased it to a Mrs. Foley and one, Silas Hughes' l Noble was responsible for many works in the area including Moore's Cottages, Chetwynd Street
 (qv) and a cottage for one Thompson in Spencer Street.
 Description -A two-storey part stuccoed and part basalt masonry house with a corniced parapet and quoins to lower openings and corners. Commencing as a three room stone house in 1864, it was extended by 1868 presumably in stuccoed brick, to a six-room residence to appear in this form, in the 1866 isometric of Melbourne.
 Remnants of this growth include the lower party wall, buttressed modillions, whilst the later stage is elegantly shown in sharply defined, but simple detailing at the parapet: a foliated entablature panels an acroterion s

 and scrolls. Shutters survive at the lower level.

Integrity -Generally originals given early changes.

Streetscape -Contributing and prominent part of the Capel Street residential streetscape: pairing off with 64 in form, scale and siting.

Significance -Architecturally a combination of eras in the juxtaposition of the uncommon stone and the later Italian-bred stucco work, but generally original and an early example with early accessories s such as the shutters and precise details: contributing to the streetscape and gaining importance from its adjoining to 64: of regional significance. Historically, another of the many examples of a resident owner-builders s from the study areas who did work in the inner suburban area; of high local importance.

Recommendations -Repaint stucco and trim in original or typical colours; record shutter details for restoration data; consider re-zoning to Residential At or Special Residential
 2 to preserve residential use and form.

History

The houses at 63-65 Capel Street first appear in the rate books in 1866, when they are described as unfinished two-room brick houses, each with an Average Annual Value of £18. The houses were owned by Henry Allison, and later the Allison Trust, for over thirty years. By 1889, the houses are described in the rate books as three-room brick houses, and were rated at £26 each.

Description/Notable Features

The houses at 63-65 Capel Street are a pair of single-storey Victorian cottages, constructed in brick with transverse gabled slate roofs and a central red brick chimney. The roofs are partially concealed by a rendered parapet, from which part of the cornice of No. 65 has been removed. The verandahs have been substantially altered.

Statement of Significance

The houses at 63-65 Capel Street, West Melbourne, are of local historical and aesthetic interest. The houses represent the type of modest speculative housing which proliferated in North and West Melbourne in the nineteenth century. Aesthetically, the houses are reasonably intact and form an interesting element in the streetscape.

Recommended AlterationsOther Comments

Upgraded from E to D. The houses are reasonably intact representative examples of nineteenth century workers' cottages. The appearance and streetscape value of the houses would be enhanced by the reconstruction of traditional Victorian verandah details.

History - Joseph Dean who was a stonemason, built this house in 1865-66. He lived in it himself for short periods but generally it was leased until he sold it to James Walters a Williamstown draper, who continued to own it until after 1897. Some tenants include William Allen, Stephen Bell, Charles More and Mrs. Hill. Joseph Dean who earlier lived in Peel Street. was also the builder of the Methodist New Connexion Church School, later the Congregational Church, cnr. Rosslyn and William Street. 2 (demolished)

Description -A two-storey parapeted and part stuccoed house of basalt coursed rubble, with sandstone quoins to openings as seen on the north face. The two-level, altered timber verandah has cast-iron frieze panels, bellied iron balustrade panels and a modified, square-head picket fence. The architraved, upper-level window has the distinctively early detail of half side-lights, with adjoining hung sashes over a lower panel. Decorative stucco elements include parapet scrolls, a cornice and unusual stylised brackets and rolled mouldings to the side-wall faces, set against the stone work.

Integrity -The verandah has been altered by removal of details and provision of a prop at the lower level; the parapet appears to have been squared-off and urns removed, whilst the cornice mould has been rendered over; a sympathetic new or amended (cut down picket) fence has been placed at the frontage; stone work has been painted; and roof plumbing changed.

Streetscape -An early, prominent and contributive part of the Capel Street residential streetscape, pairing with 62.

Significance

Architecturally, possible combination of designs by the one builder (i.e.. stucco overlaying stone) but possessing early and uncommon details, iron pattern and the use of combined stone work (basalt and freestone) on modestly scaled residential work: of regional importance.

Historically, built by another of the many builder-owners in the study area who was responsible for at least one of its public buildings: of regional importance.

Recommendations

Restore/repair verandah (roof, guttering, prop removal); repair/restore eroded stonework; investigate restoration of parapet, via photographic evidence, record upper opening details for restoration data; consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2 to preserve residential use and form.'

Statement of Significance

The Residence at 64 Capel Street, West Melbourne, is of historical and architectural significance to the State of Victoria. The residence at 64 Capel Street, West Melbourne, is of historical significance as evidence of the early form of residential development in inner Melbourne.

The house is one of the earliest in the area, the land here having been sold in the late 1850s. It provides an excellent example of the kind of buildings erected by the small-scale owner-builders that were common in this part of Melbourne in the 1850s and 1860s. Dean, the builder and occupier of this house, built several others in the area. The Residence at 64 Capel Street, West Melbourne, is of architectural significance as an example of domestic architecture displaying uncommon early details and cast iron pattern and as an unusual example of combined stone (basalt and freestone) and stucco work.

'Official Journal of the Australian Institute of Architects Victorian Chapter'.

'This was in the Hamer period of Liberal government, as was the infill phase, the next stage in Government housing, at its outset. This saw a complete refocus on the single or two-storeyed house, as a terrace, dropped into a row of other houses, or continuing a suburban street pattern. Here a convergence of later ideas was brought to bear: mixed urban use as prescribed by Jane Jacobs in 1963 seemed more reachable if you integrated new housing visually within older suburbs. And concerns about social stigma of conspicuously different housing projects could be addressed by embedding new houses in established streets. The revision of a-contextual modernism, and its excessive focus on industrial and production imagery, could be addressed by a return to contextual linkage through older and distinctively local textures, colour, material and forms. The Carlton and North Fitzroy housing of Station, Kay, and Canning Streets, the incursions there by Edmond and Corrigan, Greg Burgess, Peter Crone and Norman Day, accompanied by the act of buying older houses (establishing a new social role and meaning in that process).

By 1983-4 this genre had expanded to larger groupings of 26, as with Leo development Jong's Public Works development in North Melbourne of up to over 100 or more units; also Cox and Carmichael's Hihett development... 'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Tuesday 1 November 1887

'CITY COUNCIL ELECTIONS. Mr. J. W. PEIRCE AT WEST MELBOURNE

Mr. J. W. Peirce, the retiring councillor for Bourke Ward, met about 30 ratepayers at the James Watt Hotel, Spencer-street, last night. Dr. Lloyd occupied the chair. Mr. Peirce said that when he sought election three years ago he made many promises to the ratepayers, but he had never broken faith with them. It was in consequence of his action in the City Council that 75 extra lamps were erected in the ward, and the Flagstaff-gardens were improved, so that citizens could take their wives through them at night time. The 350 trees recently planted in the streets of the ward were the outcome of his energies. It had been proposed to erect a refrigerating room in the reserve of the Victoria Market, but he thought the land would be turned to better account if shops were erected on it, and he had this done. The shops already opened were returning 12 per cent, on the money expended on them. He acted on four committees of the council, and read a return of attendances to show that he was most regular. The work of the council was really done in committee, and not by those gentlemen who aired their eloquence at council meetings. It had always been his object to keep down the rating on citizens, and the council would soon be in such a position that it would not know what to do with its money. The Western Market would soon be acquired by it, and the returns which would be received from it would pay the expenditure of one ward..... While for 28 years their members of Parliament had been promising to obtain for them a recreation reserve, he had done so within six months of his election, and that was for no other reason than that he exercised some influence in both Parliament and the council.'

'The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Monday 2 July 1906

'ARBOR DAY, North and West Melbourne'

'...The tree planting portion of the day's programme was then taken in hand, trees being planted by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Director of Education, Messrs.

Aikman and Edgar, members of the board of advice and others.

At the King-street school, West Melbourne, Arbor day was also duly observed. The morning was occupied in lessons bearing on trees and their cultivation, and in the afternoon the board of advice attended, and a squad of cadets paraded with the flag, and the bugle band played. Trees were planted in the ground, and a large number of visitors were present.'

Original Building Type

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

A two-storey, face brick row of four houses with two level timber verandahs and simply corniced parapets, fronting a transverse gable roof line - typical of the row's early construction. Sparse detail occurs at the party-wall faces where the usual panelled and bracketed shapes combine with precise shell and diamond motifs set within and without panels. Presumably reinforcing this diamond shape, is the uncommon Chinese-like timber balustrading which contains a saltire-cross with panelled borders, whilst early pattern serpentine iron friezes are set within timber rails nearby. Notable features include iron details, verandah, bricks voussoirs

Statement of Significance

Architectural, a typical early row utilising one of the decorative options of the pre-local cast-iron manufacturing period i.e. timber balustrading which, in the material and pattern used, is rare (if original); of regional importance. Historically, built by another of the many owner-builder developers from the area and particularly this street: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Restore detail of 80-2 using 84-6 as a model as desired; repaint row in original or typical colours; record timber balustrade for restoration data; rebuild timber picket fences in arrow-head form unless evidence found to show original; consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to preserve residential use and form. 80, 82 Fence and balustrade new (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) lower frieze gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design) 84, 86 Stucco new (sympathetic - remove by approved method) upper frieze gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design) fence gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments

Integrity - The row, as a whole has been altered in detail by removal of balustrading and the panelled timber fences (80, 84-6); 82 has been part painted and 84-6 stuccoed. Streetscape - Contributing part of the Capel Street residential streetscape adjoining its termination (88 Capel and 189 Victoria Street) and sharing its scale, finish and ornament.

Description/Notable Features

Builders, Holmes and Co., constructed this parapeted, two-storey corner row, of quoined, rock face basalt masonry. Multi-paned window sashes are typical and show windows (2) in 1 Chetwynd Street have survived, as has the heavily moulded four-panel door, which differs from the shallow mouldings on the private residences adjoining. Of note is the street name plate, fixed to the wall in the traditional way. The building is at the street alignment. Notable features include shopfront, stone finish, design. Enamel street sign on wall.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, high integrity, uncommon well-laid wall material, unusual combination of uses in a row, early construction date and obvious corner siting give this building State significance. Historically, owned and occupied by a man of a horse-trade allied occupation typical of the study area and prominently located: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Maintain existing trim colours or repaint in original colours; record show-window and street-name details for restoration data. Chimney gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments Integrity - Generally intact, existing colour scheme sympathetic. Streetscape - A major corner building at the brow of the Chetwynd Street hill, linked with the later 9 Chetwynd (qv), 5, 7 and 8 Stanley (qv) by period detail and parapeted form.

ESTATE of WALTER DUKE, DECEASED.

J R. BUXTON and Co. in conjunction with R.- J- .MILLS and SONS Estate Agents, South Melbourne) are instructed by- Mrs. E. A. Opie, executrix, to sell by public auction, at their rooms, Collins-street, Melbourne facing Market-street, rear Scott s Hotel.

That handsome nearly new and very substantial RESIDENCE, known as SHOREHAM," No. 9 CHETWIND-STREET, just opposite St. Mary's Cathedral-buildings. This house was built by the deceased in 1898 for his own use and enjoyment, from plans prepared by Mr. W. H. Webb, architect, the building being erected- by Messrs, McConnell and McIntosh, the well-known contractors, and, it may fairly be claimed that it is one of the best built houses ever erected in Melbourne.

It has a handsome appearance and contains nice drawing and dining rooms, hall (7 ft. 0 in. wide), roomy and comfortable kitchen (12 ft., .8 in, x 15 ft.,) storeroom (now used as servant's bedroom), pantries, wash house with copper and troughs, and enamelled bath etc. Five very fine bedrooms upstairs, enclosed vestibule at side , good yard enclosed by brick walls and paved with bricks, and having stable for one horse. buggy house, feed room, loft etc., all carried out in brickwork of first class character. Handsome Balcony and verandah, the verandah being paved with Minton tiles. Iron palisade fence on dressed bluestone base in front.

The house has a wonderfully solid bluestone foundations all round, and lofty ceilings is splendidly fitted up throughout with marble mantelpieces. Electric lights to all rooms (27 points), gas is also laid to all rooms; wardrobes, cupboards, dresser, &c.

Bronze statuette on newel post in hall; cathedral glass, glass sidelights and skylight. Copper and brass electroliers, etc first class doors, skirtings and architraves, expensive and handsome fibrous plaster ceilings etc.

The place is in perfect order throughout and from the front fence to the back wall of the stable at the end of the yard has not a blemish or defect about it, it is rare indeed and very gratifying to find such an honestly constructed house, built like its neighbour, the cathedral, opposite not for a day but for centuries.

Anyone wanting a good home or an exceptionally sound investment is earnestly advised to inspect this property... Title, Crown certificate. . Terms-cash in a month.'

History

Walter Duke, who operated a carriage building company with his brother, built this house in 1898 and lived there until after 1900.

Description/Notable Features

North Melbourne architect, William Webb, designed this ornately decorated, two-storey face-brick and stucco house, with a two-level cast-iron verandah and iron picket fence. Local builders, McConnell and McIntosh carried out this design. A pired and balustraded parapet, with a central segment-arched entablature, surmounts a dentilated cornice with a foliated frieze to the secondary entablature and tympanum. Candle-snuffer pinnacles to the verandah walls are supported by deep brackets which are repeated at the storey line, as are the pinnacles on the fence piers. Balloon arches in the iron friezes, reflect the full arched openings, which are picked out with contrasting brick and flanked by colonettes, and the spoked fanlight to the side-lit doorway. Notable features include verandah, details, finishes, design and fence.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a common inner suburban form and of a late date but richly and skilfully decorated, near original and part of a related streetscape: of regional importance. Historically, owned by a man of the horse-trade allied industry of carriage building, so pertinent to North Melbourne's proximity to the horse markets: of regional importance.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint, trim in typical or original colours; rebuilt fence post pinnacle to match existing; examine parapet for evidence of urns and replace as desired. Stone plinth painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally original except the northern fence post (missing a pinnacle) and possible loss of parapet urns. Streetscape - Contributing part of a group of 19th century

Walter Duke, who operated a carriage building company with his brother, built this house in 1898 and lived there until after 1900.

Description

North Melbourne architect, William Webb, designed this ornately decorated, two-storey face-brick and stucco house, with a two-level cast-iron verandah and iron picket fence. Local builders, McConnell and McIntosh carried out this design. A pierced and balustraded parapet, with a central segment-arched entablature, surmounts a dentilated cornice with a foliated frieze to the secondary entablature and tympanum. Candle-snuffer pinnacles to the verandah walls are supported by deep brackets which are repeated at the storey line, as are the pinnacles on the fence piers. Balloon arches in the iron friezes, reflect the full arched openings, which are picked out with contrasting brick and flanked by colonettes, and the spoked fanlight to the side-lit doorway.

Integrity - Generally original except the northern fence post (missing a pinnacle) and possible loss of parapet urns.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a group of 19th century housing pivoting around 1-3 Chetwynd (qv) and including 8, 2 Stanley, 5-7 Chetwynd and the distant but similar 21-5.

Significance

Architecturally, of a common inner suburban form and of a late date but richly and skilfully decorated, near original and part of a related streetscape: of regional importance. `Dr. George :Moore, examined. doctor of medicine.

Where do you reside ?

-At St. Kilda and Moe, Gippsland.

What experience, have you of coalmining ?

-I have been connected with coal mining since 1882.

4333. In this district ?-Yes.

4334. Where and how ?

-In the Narracan Valley, about four miles from Moe.

4335. A seam of coal was discovered there ?

-Yes, some year or two before that by a Mr. Milia.

A company was formed there by Mr. Mills and his friends, but, in the course of time, that company succumbed, and some time after that I purchased a portion of the land that belonged to this company, knowing that there was coal on the place, there being an outcrop into this land. I made arrangements with my neighbours, :Mr. Stephenson, for instance, and Mr. Lithgow, through whose land the coal ran, by which we were to put our joint properties into one, and they gave me an agreement, and a long time to float a company. I succeeded in floating a company in the time, called the Moe Coal Mining Company.

43:36. That was how it was formed ?

-Yes. An outcrop in Mr. Stephenson's ground was discovered in a gully by a man cutting scrub; the coal was visible.

4337. Is that outcrop near the mouth of the tunnel of the present mine?

-Half-a-mile this side.

4338. North-west?-Yes.

4339. Up the hill ?-Towards Mr. Stephenson's house. The outcrop was visible there. Before I had the company floated I employed miners at my own expense, and I fully equipped them, and put them in that gully, and drove in a tunnel, and laid bare 3 feet of the outcrop, and on that 3 feet the company was floated...

4358. Do you think the fact of there being coal there had any thing to do with the construction of the Narracan Valley railway line ?

-I think it had a good deal to do with it., and if it had not been for the mine there never would have been a railway there.

4359. Do you know as a matter of fact that the Railway Commissioners seeing the coal there recommended the construction of the line ?

-I believe they did so.

4360. Do you know as a matter of fact that the railway Commissioners were requested to visit the Moe mine with a view of satisfying themselves as to the existence of coal there in order that they might be able to inform the :Minister as to the need of that line ?

-That is perfectly correct .. I know they were asked to visit with that object. We had made a definite offer to supply them at a certain sum, and they were then requested to visit the mine and give their opinion, and I have every reason to believe that after that visit the railway was passed. ...etc.'

Mr Candler held an inquest at Hotham yesterday on the body of Alice Worthington, aged 42 years, who was found hanging dead in her residence there on the 12th inst. The deceased was the wife of a stonemason, and lived near the swamp...

`George Moore, legally qualified medical practitioner, said he was called to see the deceased on Wednesday evening, and found her quite dead She had been dead for about an hour 'there was a distinct mark of a cord around the neck, but no other marks of violence In his opinion, death had been caused by strangulation From the evidence, he considered that the deceased had been of unsound mind Some years ago, when he attended her, she was suffering from puerperal mania, which frequently left permanent effects on the brain The jury returned a verdict that the deceased hanged herself whilst of unsound mind. '

`Australian Medical Journal' 1884, V6

`The sub-committee appointed by the Society to consider the complaint of Dr. Workman, beg to submit the following report: " " Dr. Workman was public vaccinator for West Melbourne. A case of small pox appeared in one of his club patients named Mrs. Henthorne; he reported the case at once to Dr. Shields, the Inspector of the Central Board of Health, and saw the case with Dr. Shields. At the request of the latter, he agreed to vaccinate the other members of the family; finding, however, that they

resided outside the district of West Melbourne, he communicated immediately with the Local Health Officer; and, under his advice, instructed Mr. Henthorne to see Dr. Moore, the proper vaccinator of the district, without delay. Henthorne readily consented, and Dr. Workman's connection with the case then ceased.

"It appears that Henthorne did not visit Dr. Moore; and when Dr. Moore called upon him, he refused to be vaccinated. Subsequently he also developed small-pox." In consequence of this miscarriage. Dr. Workman was requested to resign his office as Public Vaccinator; and when he sought to learn the reason for this request, he was informed by the President of the Central Board of Health, that it was for no failure in duty as a Public Vaccinator, but because, as a medical practitioner, he had not fulfilled his promise to vaccinate certain of his private, patients. "Dr. Workman refused to resign, alleging that he had placed the vaccination in the hands of the proper local authority, and had thereby virtually fulfilled his promise.

Thereupon he was dismissed from his office by the Governor in Council. "In the opinion of the sub-committee, the dismissal of Dr. Workman was arbitrary and unjust, and little calculated to promote cordial relations between the Government and the profession. "The sub-committee further recommend that the facts of the case as now set forth be entered in the minutes of the Society." Dr. Workman thanked the sub-committee for the trouble they had taken in the matter, but as it was apparent that no action could be taken with the likelihood of redress being obtained, he was content that the matter should be allowed to rest.'

In 1868, these houses took their name from their first owner, Dr. George Moore, a Queensberry Street surgeon. He leased them to a great range of people including John Piggott, Ephraim Hill, Johanna Cantwell, Charles Templeton and Hugh James. The row was built by Thomas Noble, a local builder. (qv)

Description/Notable Features

A single-storey, stuccoed brick row of five houses in Chetwynd Street and a former corner grocer's shop, hemi-hexagonal in plan, which links this row with another similar row of Moore's Cottages (5) in Rosslyn Street. The houses have transverse gabled iron roofs, doors placed in pairs, single windows and are all built on the street alignment. Notable features include early street side frontage.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a simple early form with little architectural distinction individually, but as continuous rows, closely matched to the streets' irregular junction angle and the small confined scale evokes this early period well: of regional significance. Historically, a development by a local resident and a local builder, typical of the introversion of much of the area's speculative development: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Restore details as identified; repaint in typical or original colours; consider recladding the roof of 72-4 with iron; consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to preserve residential use and form. 12, 14-16, 18-20 Door (sympathetic - reinstate original design)

Other Comments

Integrity - Details such as doors have changed (16) and as well, new tiles placed on 70-4 Rosslyn, however the overall character is unaltered.

Streetscape - Strong streetscape relationship, being hard on the street, on both sides and the apex of a triangular site. Trees in Chetwynd Street assist the small and intimate scale of these houses by confinement of the field of vision to them, whilst the former shop obtains maximum prominence.

`George Moore, legally qualified medical practitioner, said he was called to see the deceased on Wednesday evening, and found her quite dead She had been dead for about an hour 'there was a distinct mark of a cord around the neck, but no other marks of violence In his opinion, death had been caused by strangulation From the evidence, he considered that the deceased had been of unsound mind Some years ago, when he attended her, she was suffering from puerperal mania, which frequently left permanent effects on the brain The jury returned a verdict that the deceased hanged herself whilst of unsound mind. '

'Australian Medical Journal' 1884, V6

'The sub-committee appointed by the Society to consider the complaint of Dr. Workman, beg to submit the following report: " " Dr. Workman was public vaccinator for West Melbourne. A case of small pox appeared in one of his club patients named Mrs. Henthorne; he reported the case at once to Dr. Shields, the Inspector of the Central Board of Health, and saw the case with Dr. Shields. At the request of the latter, he agreed to vaccinate the other members of the family; finding, however, that they

resided outside the district of West Melbourne, he communicated immediately with the Local Health Officer; and, under his advice, instructed Mr. Henthorne to see Dr. Moore, the proper vaccinator of the district, without delay. Henthorne readily consented, and Dr. Workman's connection with the case then ceased.

" It appears that Henthorne did not visit Dr. Moore; and when Dr. Moore called upon him, he refused to be vaccinated. Subsequently he also developed small-pox. " In consequence of this miscarriage. Dr. Workman was requested to resign his office as Public Vaccinator; and when he sought to learn the reason for this request, he was informed by the President of the Central Board of Health, that it was for no failure in duty as a Public Vaccinator, but because, as a medical practitioner, he had not fulfilled his promise to vaccinate certain of his private, patients. "Dr. Workman refused to resign, alleging that he had placed the vaccination in the hands of the proper local authority, and had thereby virtually fulfilled his promise.

Thereupon he was dismissed from his office by the Governor in Council. "In the opinion of the sub-committee, the dismissal of Dr. Workman was arbitrary and unjust, and little calculated to promote cordial i*elations between the Government and the profession. "The sub-committee further recommend that the facts of the case as now set forth be entered in the minutes of the Society." Dr. Workman thanked the sub-committee for the trouble they had taken in the matter, but as it was apparent that no action could be taken with the likelihood of redress being obtained, he was content that the matter should be allowed to rest.'

Description/Notable Features

A single-storey, stuccoed brick row of five houses in Chetwynd Street and a former corner grocer's shop, hemi-hexagonal in plan, which links this row with another similar row of Moore's Cottages (5) in Rosslyn Street. The houses have transverse gabled iron roofs, doors placed in pairs, single windows and are all built on the street alignment. Notable features include early street side frontage.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a simple early form with little architectural distinction individually, but as continuous rows, closely matched to the streets' irregular junction angle and the small confined scale evokes this early period well: of regional significance. Historically, a development by a local resident and a local builder, typical of the introversion of much of the area's speculative development: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments

Integrity - Details such as doors have changed (16) and as well, new tiles placed on 70-4 Rosslyn, however the overall character is unaltered.

Streetscape - Strong streetscape relationship, being hard on the street, on both sides and the apex of a triangular site. Trees in Chetwynd Street assist the small and intimate scale of these houses by confinement of the field of vision to them, whilst the former shop obtains maximum prominence.

Twenty-car garage and a unique historic pad - Domain Effie Mann

`When the Gardini Motor Company built this warehouse in 1925, it selected the gritty West Melbourne location for its convenience, storing its vehicles and machinery under the solid brick beauty's eight-metre ceilings.

These days, Melbourne's old inner-city industry has metamorphosed into new-age residency. Rustic warehouses provide the much-longed-for space apartment living just can't satisfy, and enable work-life balance with room to set up a shop, office or studio under the same roof.

Who better to oversee such a transformation than architect Susan Banks, who renovated the 698-square-metre property to incorporate two floors of living space about 15 years ago?

Behind the ivy-covered facade are three bedrooms, two bathrooms and an open-plan kitchen, dining and lounge. A large rooftop garden adjoins the latter - sitting above the iconic Gardini sign. There's still space to park a car or 20 in the adjoining warehouse, which, with laneway access, provides scope for development.

(Royal Commission evidence given by George Moore on the Narracan Railway and his cola mine supplying same Taken at Moe.)

`Dr. George :Moore, examined. doctor of medicine.

Where do you reside ?

-At St. Kilda and Moe, Gippsland.

What experience, have you of coalmining ?

-I have been connected with coal mining since 1882.

4333. In this district ?-Yes.

4334. Where and how ?

-In the Narracan Valley, about four miles from Moe.

4335. A seam of coal was discovered there ?

-Yes, some year or two before that by a Mr. Milia.

A company was formed there by Mr. Mills and his friends, but, in the course of time, that company succumbed, and some time after that I purchased a portion of the land that belonged to this company, knowing that there was coal on the place, there being an outcrop into this land. I made arrangements with my neighbours, :Mr. Stephenson, for instance, and Mr. Lithgow, through whose land the coal ran, by which we were to put our joint properties into one, and they gave me an agreement, and a long time to float a company. I succeeded in floating a company in the time, called the Moe Coal Mining Company.

43:36. That was how it was formed ?

-Yes. An outcrop in Mr. Stephenson's ground was discovered in a gully by a man cutting scrub; the coal was visible.

4337. Is that outcrop near the mouth of the tunnel of the present mine?

-Half-a-mile this side.

4338. North-west?-Yes.

4339. Up the hill ?-Towards Mr. Stephenson's house. The outcrop was visible there. Before I had the company floated I employed miners at my own expense, and I fully equipped them, and put them in that gully, and drove in a tunnel, and laid bare 3 feet of the outcrop, and on that 3 feet the company was floated...

4358. Do you think the fact of there being coal there had any thing to do with the construction of the Narracan Valley railway line ?

-I think it had a good deal to do with it., and if it had not been for the mine there never would have been a railway there.

4359. Do you know as a matter of fact that the Railway Commissioners seeing the coal there recommended the construction of the line ?

-I believe they did so.

4360. Do you know as a matter of fact that the railway Commissioners were requested to visit the Moe mine with a view of satisfying themselves as to the existence of coal there in order that they might be able to inform the :Minister as to the need of that line ?

-That is perfectly correct .. I know they were asked to visit with that object. We had made a definite offer to supply them at a certain sum, and they were then requested to visit the mine and give their opinion, and I have every reason to believe that after that visit the railway was passed. ...etc.'

4333. In this district ?-Yes.

4334. Where and how ?

-In the Narracan Valley, about four miles from Moe.

4335. A seam of coal was discovered there ?

-Yes, some year or two before that by a Mr. Milia.

A company was formed there by Mr. Mills and his friends, but, in the course of time, that company succumbed, and some time after that I purchased a portion of the land that belonged to this company, knowing that there was coal on the place, there being an outcrop into this land. I made arrangements with my neighbours, :Mr. Stephenson, for instance, and Mr. Lithgow, through whose land the coal ran, by which we were to put our joint properties into one, and they gave me an agreement, and a long time to float a company. I succeeded in floating a company in the time, called the Moe Coal Mining Company.

4338. North-west?-Yes.

Before I had the company floated I employed miners at my own expense, and I fully equipped them, and put them in that gully, and drove in a tunnel, and laid bare 3 feet of the outcrop, and on that 3 feet the company was floated...

Description/Notable Features

A single-storey, stuccoed brick row of five houses in Chetwynd Street and a former corner grocer's shop, hemi-hexagonal in plan, which links this row with another similar row of Moore's Cottages (5) in Rosslyn Street. The houses have transverse gabled iron roofs, doors placed in pairs, single windows and are all built on the street alignment. Notable features include early street side frontage.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a simple early form with little architectural distinction individually, but as continuous rows, closely matched to the streets' irregular junction angle and the small confined scale evokes this early period well: of regional significance. Historically, a development by a local resident and a local builder, typical of the introversion of much of the area's speculative development: of local interest.

In 1868, these houses took their name from their first owner, Dr. George Moore, a Queensberry Street surgeon. He leased them to a great range of people including John Piggott, Ephraim Hill, Johanna Cantwell, Charles Templeton and Hugh James. The row was built by Thomas Noble, a local builder. (qv)

Description/Notable Features

A single-storey, stuccoed brick row of five houses in Chetwynd Street and a former corner grocer's shop, hemi-hexagonal in plan, which links this row with another similar row of Moore's Cottages (5) in Rosslyn Street. The houses have transverse gabled iron roofs, doors placed in pairs, single windows and are all built on the street alignment. Notable features include early street side frontage.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a simple early form with little architectural distinction individually, but as continuous rows, closely matched to the streets' irregular junction angle and the small confined scale evokes this early period well: of regional significance. Historically, a development by a local resident and a local builder, typical of the introversion of much of the area's speculative development: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Restore details as identified; repaint in typical or original colours; consider recladding the roof of 72-4 with iron; consider re-zoning to Residential A or Special Residential 2, to preserve residential use and form. 12, 14-16, 18-20 Door (sympathetic - reinstate original design)

Other Comments

Integrity - Details such as doors have changed (16) and as well, new tiles placed on 70-4 Rosslyn, however the overall character is unaltered.

Streetscape - Strong streetscape relationship, being hard on the street, on both sides and the apex of a triangular site. Trees in Chetwynd Street assist the small and intimate scale of these houses by confinement of the field of vision to them, whilst the former shop obtains maximum prominence.

'Berlei started with two aunts making corsets at home in Melbourne in 1881, and has grown to an internationally renowned company with a fiercely loyal following. Right from the outset Berlei was progressive and technically innovative. In 1926 Berlei partnered with the University of Sydney to conduct an anthropometric survey of 6000 women to better understand women's bodies. The results changed the nature of corset making around the world.'

'In 1950 Berlei developed Australia's first maternity bra. In 1990, Berlei, in partnership with the AIS (Australian Institute of Sport) began testing and measuring 'bounce reduction' on elite athletes while performing different levels of activity such as walking, running and high impact sports. This led to the support factor rating system to help women determine which sports bra they should wear during exercise. In 2010 Berlei celebrated fuller busted and curvier women with the launch of Berlei Curves, and the introduction of a new curvier in-store mannequin.'

`MODERN CORSET MAKING.

Now that frocks and coats are being more closely-fitted to the figure the importance of correctly-fitting foundation garments can scarcely be overestimated Such renowned makes of corsets, brassieres, and other garments, as are purchased under the names of Liberty, Avio, Warner's, Redfern, and Kestos are produced in the Melbourne factory of Messrs R and W H. Symington & Co (Aust) Pty, Ltd , where the most up-to-date of machinery and equipment makes for the efficiency of the productions Spacious and airy rooms on a large block of land in West Melbourne command a grateful view of green leas from the lofty windows Within the white-overalled girls attend the electric sewing machines, the electing irons, the cutting machines, and the eyelet equipping devices. For recreation and rest the employees are provided with a tennis court on the roof, a recreation and luncheon hall, in which tea is provided, and a "hospital" in which works is may receive attention if the need arises In addition to the usual time allowed for lunch, the girl employees are allowed an interval for morning tea, and as there is no work done on Saturdays, the employees have plenty of time for the many self-imposed home tasks which most girls like to perform, as well as for outings at the week-end.

In addition to the brands of foundation garments mentioned, Symington and Co manufacture exclusively various brands on behalf of the leading... and retail stores throughout Australia.'

`The West Australian' (Perth, WA : 1879 - 1954) Friday 15 May 1931

`A MODERN FACTORY.

An inspection of the recently enlarged factory of R. and W. H. Symington and Co.. (Aust.) Pty., Ltd., brings true appreciation of the rapid progress made by modern industry. The congenial conditions under which the employees work contrast greatly with the lot of industrial workers a few years ago.

The large, airy rooms,

some occupying the entire space of one floor, are naturally lit, and an atmosphere of cleanliness is enhanced by the white overalls of the girls. Not one of the hundreds of employees engaged in the manufacture of corsets- and allied garments at this factory, it is stated, has been dismissed. Everything that, is possible to increase the comfort of the employees has been done. A tennis court is at their disposal on the roof, and a recreation room and a lunch hall are well patronised. In addition, there is a miniature hospital where employees may receive attention. The week's work ends on Friday afternoon, and no work is done on Saturdays. 'The renewed enthusiasm and energy with which the girls return to work each Monday,' the management says, 'is their practical way of saying 'Thank you.' 'The work rooms are well equipped with modern and easily managed machinery. Symington's, which, it is stated, is the largest manufacturing firm of its kind in Australia, is (he Australian branch of the English firm of the same name, which was established nearly a century ago. The factory is at West Melbourne (Vic.) and many different types of corsetry are manufactured. In addition, the firm manufactures exclusively many brands on behalf of leading wholesale and retail stores throughout Australia.

'Shepparton Advertiser' (Vic. : 1914 - 1953) Friday 27 May 1949

'All Women Can Have Liberty

This was the impression we gained after talking to a representative of R and W. H Symington and Co. (Aust.) Pty. Ltd., makers of the world famous Liberty foundation garments, and Nu-Back corselettes.

It was gratifying to know that Shepparton has been chosen to feature a special Liberty week during the first week of June, and our fashion-conscious feminine population- will be delighted at the extensive range of corsetry available In all sizes and prices.

Recently we had an opportunity of chatting with a member of this well known firm who had a very interesting and enlightening story to tell concerning the background of this enterprising organisation which is so well known all over the world. Symington's have six large factories in England, also they have a factory in Dundalk, Eire, two factories in New Zealand and two in Australia, one in West Melbourne which was opened in 1921, and another, established in 1943' at St. Arnaud.

Liberty garments were first manufactured in England at Market Harborough in 1856, and since that time have succeeded in maintaining an- enviable position In the world of corsetry.

In Australia, at West Melbourne, where the Liberty factory occupies an extensive -block of land from Howard street to Chetwynd street, all Liberty foundation garments are designed specially to suit the Australian figure requirements, Liberty offers a- garment to suit every figure type, and this is achieved mainly because of a very special method of scientific designing, very interesting to the average person who hitherto -had not realised what a scientific business corsetry really is. While there is a style and. A price to suit every woman, in no instance is quality of materials and workmanship sacrificed for price. All the materials used in Liberty garments are the finest obtainable and are fully guaranteed. Symington's are the manufacturers also of the famous Nu-Back corselettes.etc.'

'Jenyns Corsets (1898-1990s).

Established by husband and wife Ebenezer Randolphus Jenyns (1865-1958) and Sarah Ann Jenyns (1865-1952), in Brisbane in 1898. Jenyns was a family run business, but was run by a family with serious divisions.

What: Jenyns was a leading corset label that pioneered 'surgical' and 'hygienic' corsets for women. The business eventually became one of the country's most significant underwear empires, and one of Queensland's longest running fashion companies.

When: The business was established in the late nineteenth century, and survived in to the last decade of the 20th century. After more than fifty years as a successful enterprise, the company was sold to global brand, Triumph, in the late 1960s, which continued to use the Jenyns name, trading as The House of Jenyns. Triumph sold Jenyns in 1992, when it was split into a medical products company, Jenyns Pty Ltd., owned by Jenyns family members Ken, Pat and Julie Jenyns, and a specialised surgical corset business, Jenyns Bryant Surgical Corsetry Pty Ltd. These continued operating in to the 1990s.

Where: Jenyns corsets were stocked throughout the country in department stores and draperies, shown at exhibitions and fairs nationally, licensed through international retailers, and sold from their own premises. The company had locations in George Street (321 and later 309-315), Brisbane, for several decades, later moving to Melbourne Street, South Brisbane. After Triumph purchased the company in the late 1960s, the then named 'House of Jenyns' operated in Ipswich, until at least the late 1980s, when its once exceptionally popular corsets became a more or less obsolete product for most women. Why: Few Queensland fashion companies have had the rich history and longevity of Jenyns. While initially starting as a partnership between husband and wife Ebenezer and Sarah, it was Sarah who developed Jenyns into a leading corset company that endured for close to a century. Sarah was a passionate advocate for modernising corset designs, and developed side lacing and fan lacing corsets that enabled a wearer to easily get in and out of the garment without assistance (as was the case with older corset designs). She also believed that these garments had great medical benefits; relieving back problems, improving the figure, and supporting posture. Her patented designs were endorsed by the London Institute of Hygiene, a significant tick of approval for the company that 'legitimised' their health claims. An advertisement from 1920 states: "Jenyns supporting and reducing corsets are a health corset of distinctive merit. They are designed to combine the best principles of an abdominal belt with the finest artistry in corset making. The result is a corset unique in its supporting features and modern fashionable lines."

By 1911 Sarah Jenyns was running her corset business independently, and continued to be associated with the success and legacy of Jenyns. Ebenezer continued to create surgical corsets as well, though with less success. In a short-lived moment of stability, they formed Jenyns Patent Corset Pty Co. in 1915.

In the 1920s the family business completely split, with Ebenezer and his son John applying for their own patents, and trading as Jenyns Truss & Patent Pty Co. However, this venture did not fair well. By contrast, Sarah's enterprise continued to grow. She brought her son Herbert in to the company, and he worked alongside her for more than twenty years. She secured Jenyns Patent Corset Co. Pty Ltd and continued to expand and patent new designs and improvements. Herbert was manager of Jenyns Patent Corsets by 1928, and instigated the manufacture of foundation garments and underclothing. Herbert became managing director of Jenyns in 1946. His own sons continued in the business in to the late 20th century. The business grew from 15 employees in 1920 to 500 in 1964. During World War II, Jenyns received large contracts from the army and navy to supply garments, and this was a time of rapid expansion for the business. Jenyns did have competition from local and international companies. In Australia their main rival was Berlei, and internationally firms such as Camp and Symington also served a similar market.

Herbert Jenyns led the company once Sarah become too elderly. Her own health failed her and she became senile. In 1951 more familial tension surfaced when it was alleged in the Supreme Court that Herbert had 'unduly influenced his mother to transfer 13,655 shares in the company to him.' Sarah passed away in 1952, and in 1953 the court's decision was reversed in Herbert's favour. He continued to run the business, becoming a millionaire.

Jenyns corsets continued to be a fixture of women's wardrobes in to the 1960s, with many women still wearing them until the business was sold in 1992. Today Jenyns corsets are still coveted by collectors.

Description/Notable Features

An unusually sited and formed, parapeted and stuccoed brick row house pair of one storey, with an iron verandah, balustrade using McLean's pattern of 1877 and front fence. A gabled entablature is central to the pair with an acroterion at the apex, scrolls, swags and balustrading on either side. Sited high on an embankment and back from the street, the pair possess high retaining walls to the verandahs and a long, raking garden dividing-wall between. Notable features include fence, verandah decoration, verandah roof and structure, elevated site.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, designed by the distinguished architect, William Pitt (of the Rialto and Oldfleet Collins Street), this represents an original example of the low number of small residential commissions known and reflects his skill in the use of the elevated site and leading garden wall, directing attention to the central parapet pediment. It also represents an unusually sited row house pair (above and distant from the street) with uncommon original elements such as the balustrade. Historically, another example of small developments by local residents, alongside their homes.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint in original or typical colours; consider zoning policy to maintain residential use and form i.e. as Column 4 use. Stone plinth (fence) painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally original. Streetscape - Isolated trio of similar buildings (including 66) which are distinctively sited, particularly when viewed from a distance.

Streetscape - Isolated trio of similar buildings (including 66) which are distinctively sited, particularly when viewed from a distance.

Significance

Architecturally, designed by the distinguished architect, William Pitt (of the Rialto and Olderfleet Collins Street), this represents an original example of the low number of small residential commissions known and reflects his skill in the use of the elevated site and leading garden wall, directing attention to the central parapet pediment. It also represents an unusually sited row house pair (above and distant from the street) with uncommon original elements such as the balustrade. Historically, another example of small developments by local residents, alongside their homes.

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study (1983)History

Next to a cottage built by one Latham and later owned by chemist Charles Atkin and finally purchased by James B. Spence, the latter gentleman who resided in Victorian Street, Hotham, proceeded to build these two cottages to the south of the first (66) in 1884-5. His builder was local resident James Amess (qv) of Dryburgh Street and the architect, the renowned William Pitt. His tenants included John Methewson, Charles E. Hirst and a music teacher, one Herr George St. De Chaneet.

Description

An unusually sited and formed, parapeted and stuccoed brick row house pair of one storey, with an iron verandah, balustrade using McLean's pattern of 1877 and front fence. A gabled entablature is central to the pair with an acroterion at the apex, scrolls, swags and balustrading on either side. Sited high on an embankment and back from the street, the pair possess high retaining walls to the verandahs and a long, raking garden dividing-wall between. Notable features include fence, verandah decoration, verandah roof and structure, elevated site.

Integrity - Generally original.

Description/Notable Features
Architect, A. E. Duquid and builder, James Bailey were responsible for this two-storey stuccoed brick house. Forming an obtuse angle at the street intersection, one bay is built at the street alignment, whilst the other is set back to accommodate a two-level iron verandah and iron picket fence. Rosettes and brackets under the eaves, a convex verandah roof and ornate cast-iron provide a late emphasis to the early hipped roof shape, architraved rectangular windows and otherwise plain stucco surfaces. The five-panel front door is also typical of later architecture. Note the traditional fixing of the street name sign. Notable features include fence, verandah decoration, verandah roof and structure, eaves, corner site.
Statement of Significance
Architecturally, a relatively unusual form for row house areas, being common for detached villa construction and made more so by adherence to the street frontages. It is near original and prominently sited: of regional importance. Historically, little is known about Small and hence the house possesses local interest only.

This row of four cottages, formerly known as 35-41
Dryburgh Street, was erected in two stages. The Sands &
McDougall directory for 1884 lists no houses on the east side of Dryburgh Street between Ireland and Miller Streets. The following year, a pair of houses had appeared, listed as 'Benalla Cottages' and occupied by Mrs Elizabeth Kerr and Frederick Baker. Over the next few years, the houses had a number of short-term occupants. The

Description/Notable Features

Benalla Cottages comprise of a row of four single-storey, single-fronted Victorian terrace houses. The walls are of rendered masonry, and the transverse gable roofs are clad in corrugated galvanised steel. The verandahs span between rendered wing walls, and those at Nos. 46-50 have cast iron decoration. The facades have double-hung sashes and timber doors, however the window to No. 44 has been replaced. Nos. 46-50 retain their rendered brick chimneys with corbelled cappings. None of the fences appears to be original.

Statement of Significance

Benalla Cottages, at 44-50 Dryburgh Street, are of local historical and aesthetic interest. The houses are representative of the type of modest workers' housing that proliferated in Melbourne's inner suburbs in the late nineteenth century. Aesthetically, the row is a prominent element in the largely Victorian residential streetscape.

Description/Notable Features

Benalla Cottages comprise of a row of four single-storey, single-fronted Victorian terrace houses. The walls are of rendered masonry, and the transverse gable roofs are clad in corrugated galvanised steel. The verandahs span between rendered wing walls, and those at Nos. 46-50 have cast iron decoration. The facades have double-hung sashes and timber doors, however the window to No. 44 has been replaced. Nos. 46-50 retain their rendered brick chimneys with corbelled cappings. None of the fences appears to be original.

Statement of Significance

Benalla Cottages, at 44-50 Dryburgh Street, are of local historical and aesthetic interest. The houses are representative of the type of modest workers' housing that proliferated in Melbourne's inner suburbs in the late nineteenth century. Aesthetically, the row is a prominent element in the largely Victorian residential streetscape.

The City of Melbourne Lawn Bowls Club was founded as The West Melbourne Lawn Bowls Club on 18 August 1866 at the Sabloniere Hotel, once on the corner of A'Beckett and Queen Streets, Melbourne.

The Club moved to the Flagstaff Gardens in 1879. In 1880, we were a foundation club when the Victorian Bowling Association (VBA) was formed.

Our inaugural president was Sir Charles McMahon, and the inaugural president of the VBA, Cr Sam Amess, was one of our bowlers. He was also a former Club president and a Lord Mayor of Melbourne.

The first VBA singles champion was also member of the Club and we have produced numerous state players since our inception.

The Club changed its name to City Bowling Club in 1904, and to the City Of Melbourne Bowls Club in 1964.

In January 1994 fire destroyed a large part of our clubhouse, decimating our facilities, organisation and records. However, with the tireless support and dedication of club members, the Club regrouped and continued to operate and prosper, even with limited facilities.

With thanks to the City of Melbourne Council and Council staff, the opening of our new Clubhouse marks the completion of a journey which began on that tragic day in 1994. We welcome the City of Melbourne to our club...After two seasons of operating from other clubs, whilst our home was being rebuilt, the Club moved back into its Flagstaff home in May 2009...Our new state of the art, six-energy star Clubhouse opened in 2009, with thanks to the City of Melbourne and is open to the public.'

p204-205, 1903

Mr. J. A. SINANIAN, the managing director of the J. A. Sinanian Proprietary Limited, proprietors of the Moreland Smelting Works, was born in 1866 in the city of Manchester, where his father Mr J. A. Sinanian carried on a large business as the proprietor of the Ararat Packing Warehouse, in Queen Street, with a branch house in Constantinople. He received a good public school education at St. Bede's College, Manchester, and being of an adventurous disposition spent five years after leaving college in a roving tour round the world. Many countries were visited, and two years were spent in Chili and Peru. On attaining his majority, however, he found himself, owing to unforeseen reverses, compelled to face the world. His education, though good of a sort, had only fitted him for a life of leisured ease. He had neither trade nor profession, and he found by stern experience that a limited knowledge of Latin, French, and Spanish made a poor equipment for the fray. He was, however, blessed with something better — a nature undismayed and undaunted by reverses, and a keen if untrained intelligence. For some time his fortitude was severely tried, and he fell upon evil days. Many means of earning a livelihood were essayed, amongst others as a general agent and commission broker, and the breaking up of old derelict vessels', etc. He also dealt in stocks and land, and, after a severe and unequal struggle, it at last became apparent to Mr. Sinanian that the only road to success for a man with limited means and no trade or profession was to break entirely new ground. Having some knowledge of metals, acquired during his stay in South America, he decided, after full consideration, to establish a smelting business. The Moreland Smelting Works, for the treatment of old metals — now probably the largest concern of the sort in Victoria, if not Australia — began operations in a humble way in 1889, and from small beginnings, by careful and intelligent management, the output was gradually increased, and Mr. G. Leishman, of Mirboo North, Gippsland, was taken into partnership. By the time the collapse of the boom came the business was firmly established, and by judicious nursing weathered the storm easily, although Mr. Leishman retired, and again went in for farming pursuits. Mr. Sinanian, having a keen eye for investment, was singularly fortunate in several outside ventures. These, however, were never allowed to interfere with the smelting business, which throve so that he soon found himself with many competitors, and the natural outcome of the severe competition engendered has been to compel business to be worked on an extremely low percentage basis, to the manifest advantage of both buying and selling customers. The business grew to such proportions that Mr. Sinanian had to build for himself a new factory at Dudley Street, West Melbourne, which, together with a dwelling alongside, covers nearly half an acre of ground, the architectural work in connection with the factory being carried out by Mr. Sinanian. Here metals of every description and their by-products are bought, and some idea of the magnitude of the transactions in old metals may be gathered from the fact that in practically one deal old brass tubes, brass borings, etc., to the value of some £2,400 were purchased from the New South Wales Government, besides large quantities from the Victorian railways and others. In this department the mixed lots are sorted and cleansed by expert workmen for treatment by the various smelting company limited, Mr. Sinanian retaining the bulk of the shares. An inspection of the premises of the company, with the furnaces in full blast, will prove a revelation to many, who have little idea of the magnitude of the business done. Built up by one without previous experience, and during a time of severe commercial depression, this flourishing and steadily increasing business speaks volumes for the innate shrewdness and business plants.

(Image of Premises of J. A. Sinanian Pty.. Ltd., Dudley St., West Melbourne.)

It may be mentioned that Mr. Sinanian makes a specialty of treating scrap zinc and zinc by-products from the galvanising pots, and has a separate plant for treating these latter staples alone, erected at a cost of some £900, in addition to the cost of his ordinary plant. At the rear of the premises are situated the many furnaces and other appliances for treating the various metals, which emerge thence in the form of pig lead, ingot zinc, ingot gun metal, etc. All of these, bearing the brand of the works, have been well and favourably received by the English and Continental as well as by the local markets. In fact, Mr. Sinanian 's business is chiefly an export one, and, as prices are governed by the home quotations, dealers and others can always rely on getting maximum values for their parcels. This business two years ago was converted into a proprietary... instinct, combined with courtesy, patience, and determination of the proprietor. These qualities are patent to all who are brought into contact with him in a business or social way, and he well deserves the prosperity that has resulted from the possession and use of them. The sales of zinc material exceed £12,000 per annum alone. The firm's pig lead is shipped to China, Ceylon, the various States, etc. Tons of solder are produced yearly, and the printers' metal department, devoted to type metal, stereo., linotype, monoline metal, etc., is now of such magnitude that the Government Printing Office recently purchased twenty tons in one order. The company now make a specialty of treating all linotype metal skimmings, which, together with solder, lead, and other metal residues, and the rejuvenating of old linotype metal so that it can be used again, forms a very important feature of the business. Mr. Sinanian married the daughter of the late Mr. T. Butler, of North Brighton, and is at the time of writing thirty-seven years of age, and divides his time between his country place at Ferntree Gully and his town residence. Being possessed of independent means, the business is now more a hobby than anything else with him. Accompanied by his wife and two children, he has recently returned from a trip to the old country, breaking the voyage at Ceylon, Cairo, and Paris, where they stayed for some time. Since his return Mr. Sinanian has made a trip to Fiji, accompanied by Mr.

'UTILISING OLD .METALS.

The substantial brick buildings of the J. A. Sinanian Proprietary, Limited, situated In Dudley-street, West Melbourne, known as the Moreland Smelting Works, are a monument to Australian enterprise, and afford employment to a large number of Australian artisans.

Metals of every . Description are brought, as also various kinds of metalliferous by-products, while some Idea of the magnitude of the operations in old metals may be gathered from the fact that In practically one deal, old brass tubes, brass borings, &c, to the value of some £2400 were purchased from the Government of Now South Wales,- In the company's store department the mixed lots of metals are sorted and cleansed by expert workmen for treatment by the various smelting plants. The head of the firm, Mr. -J. A. Sinanian makes a speciality of treating scrap zinc, and zinc by-products from the galvanising pots, and has a separate plant for treating these latter staples alone, erected at a cost of £500, and in addition to the cost of their ordinary plant. The premises are replete with various furnaces and other method of treating the different metals which emerge thence in the form of pig-lead, ingot zinc ingot gun metal, Ac. AH of these, bearing the brand of the works, have been well and favourably received by the English and Continental, as well as by the local markets. In fact, the Moreland Smelting Works business is chief an export one, and as prices are governed by the home quotations, dealers and others can always rely on 'getting maximum value for their marine store parcel. The works have a capacity equal to 6000 tons of metal-smelting per annum, but at present something like 2000 tons are got through comfortably in the course of a year, the turnover being given at £24,000. When the adoption of the lino-type system by the great newspapers of Australia created a demand tor linotype metal, Mr. Sinanian was one of the first Australians to foresee the demand, and arranged the furnacing conditions of his company's works accordingly. All metals associated with the printing trade are turned out in large quantities, as also some of the most useful alloys used In connection with the engineering and lead working trades. Within recent date some forty tons of linotype besides stereotype and morline metal are said to have been placed to the order of the Victorian Government, as also a goodly supply to the Government Printing Office, Tasmania, besides innumerable private orders. It is pleasing to note that the Moreland Smelting Company are extending their buying operations to Queensland, which should prove a good opportunity for the dealers of this State to get rid of obsolete metal refuse and hardware fragments, which are too frequently consigned to the rubbish heap as waste and useless products. Further particulars respecting ibis company's operations will be found in our advertising columns.'

`THOMPSON.—On the 7th inst., at Bedeque-house,
Dudley-street, West Melbourne, Gordon Augustus
Thompson, in his 87th year. '

`DEATH OF ONE OF THE OLDEST MELBOURNE RESIDENTS.

About fourteen years ago there was published in `The Argus' an article headed

"Early Australian Reminiscences," by Gordon Augustus
Thomson, of Belfast,

Ireland. That gentleman has now passed away. He died early yesterday morning, having almost reached his 86th birthday. When he dictated the article referred to he described himself as "a relic of the past century, having been born in the year 1799, and one who in his "course of wandering over the world had seen much or the early days of what is now Melbourne and Victoria." He first visited this land in the early part of 1836, coming over from Launceston in a small schooner which carried sheep.

A few days after his arrival he witnessed the first funeral, that of a child, on a spot now traversed by Queen-street, but then close by the river's brink. There were at that time only a few huts forming the settlement of Yarra Yarra, in a wilderness covered with large trees and thick scrub. Batman's hut was perched on the hill which afterwards bore his name and was the only place of pretentious appearance, having an imitation brick chimney. A little up the bank of the River Yarra there were a few huts of "wattle and daub," in one of which a Dr.

Thompson and his wife resided ; with them Mr Thomson got his food, and he assisted them, as he playfully said, by acting as a "never of wood and drawer of water" to early Melbourne generally. The chief evidences of civilisation at that time were the fowls and tame kangaroos which wandered about the huts ; and the food was principally, if not entirely, damper and Irish salt pork, with tea and sugar of course. The larder could always be replenished with kangaroo and wild fowl, so that there was abundant fare for all. Mr. Thomson remained long enough to inspect the district as far inland as where Geelong now stands, and he made sundry incursions into the dense bush. He enlarged upon the rough sketch map then in use by the Batman Company, and taking it with him to Sydney which he visited soon after, it was there published, and as a great interest was then springing up in that city about the new settlement on the Yarra Yarra, his map was eagerly consulted. As might be expected Mr. Thomson had much folk-lore—such as it was—of those primitive days in the Australias over which he rambled at large—of the natives, of the wild white men, convicts, ticket-of-leave men, and settlers.

Much that he knew must have passed away with him, for he was not given to commit his mental scraps of information to paper. Of the sale of land in those early days it will be interesting to recall one of his stories :—

"On these occasions," he says, "many of which I have witnessed between the natives and Batman and the other whites, the latter enrolled themselves as a company.

Documents of these transfers or sales were drawn up by a
Mr. Gellibrand, who had to devise a practical solution to enable the original owner or occupier to attest the deeds.

Some lamp-black and grease were mixed together, and, after such explanation of the business as could be introduced into the brain of the black fellow, we blacked his hand with the mixture and so showed him—very literally—how to affix his sign manual!

I often wondered how it would be possible afterwards, had necessity arisen, to have proved this act and deed, but so far I have not heard that any difficulty has been experienced." His voyage over here from Launceston, Tasmania, took eight or nine days. His description of the voyage was that it was very enjoyable. He made bait of the crimson lining of an old military cloak, and caught such quantities of barracouta to supplement the one piece of pork which they had on board that the crew were able to salt them down and make many presents afterwards when they came ashore. Mr. Thomson treasured a card of invitation to a supper and ball given to His Excellency Sir George Arthur, the then Governor of Tasmania. This gathering he attended in Launceston in 1836.

In his early travels here and elsewhere up and down the world Mr. Thomson did not carry money. "On arriving at an inn," he says, "I gave the landlord my name, told him I did not carry money and inquired if an order upon certain well-known bankers would do; and the answer was always in the affirmative, whether for shillings or for pounds. This was all the more necessary in these young Australian colonies, for in those days money did not come to hand with desirable regularity. On one occasion a letter of credit did not reach me till it was out of date, and I had some trouble about it."

But Mr. Thomson's money anxieties were never very serious. He was the youngest son of one of the old county families of his native district, and was throughout life most amply provided for so that he was able at all times to maintain the good social position into which he was born. In early life he was not robust; hence his studies were not closely followed, and his taste for travel had early and life-long gratification until the arrest of years made permanent location desirable.

About 45 years ago he returned to his native city, Belfast (Ireland), and erected a very fine mansion, which he named "Bedeque-house," in memory of some associations connected with family estates in a foreign country. This beautiful house had rich stores of curiosities and relics gathered in many lands. Various members of his family had seen distinguished military service. His uncle, Colonel Gordon, after whom he was named, and whose heir he became, took the island of St Vincent, and died there, as Governor, after many years' residence. The late Sir Arthur Kennedy, Governor of Queensland, was a schoolmate and old friend of Mr. Thomson's. General Sir E. Selby Smith, K.C.M.G., one of the commissioners of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London, is his nephew. The family estates of Castleton and Lowood were well known to North of Ireland men.

In the home country Mr. Thomson often received the late Rev. A. M. Henderson, with whom he was acquainted in later years as the minister of Collins-street Independent Church, Melbourne; and to this circumstance may possibly be attributed a connexion with that congregation which ripened into an attachment under the ministry of the late Rev. Thomas Jones. Mr. Thomson's chief interest as a traveller was in the scenes of the Holy Land, where influential introductions gave him large opportunities for observation. He has occasionally supplied illustrative facts, which have found their way into circulation, and some of his descriptive remarks upon the scenery of the region round about Mount Sinai, and of its weird grandeur during thunderstorms which he witnessed, have afforded instruction and pleasure to his friends at many times. Mr. Thomson never married, and he retained to the end of his days "bachelor habits." While remaining for several years in his native country he was often solicited to take a leading part in civic and religious matters, but he declined these honours. Yet he was keenly alive to what was passing in the world, and throughout life retained in full flavour those Tory sentiments which in his early days were the prominent characteristics of the leading families of the Province of Ulster in Ireland. When he became a decidedly religious man he took an active interest in visiting the sick, and in ministering to the deserving poor in many ways, and this practical Christianity only ended with the failure of physical ability a few months ago. His early training in a wealthy home gave to his manners an influence which lent force to his pleadings, and made his personal appeals more powerful. One instance of his charity may be mentioned in the case of a disabled woman whom he visited when on a tour in the Highlands of Scotland about forty years ago.

Finding that she needed more than good words he promised material help, and he arranged that this should be paid as long as the sufferer lived. To benefit his health, and to do some good to those to whom he was strongly attached, he returned to this colony in 1872, to find the settlement by the scrub-covered bank of the Yarra Yarra "crowned," as he said, "by the noble City of Melbourne," and to lay his bones here." His remains will now rest in ground which he selected several years ago in the Kew Cemetery. The interment takes place to-day, the funeral leaving his late residence, Bedeque-house, Dudley-street, West Melbourne, at 2 p.m. '

'IDEALS.

From the "Arena-Sun."

A Freetrade Journal on Labor's Ideals.

Our Labor Party here (Melbourne) has its ideals—Labor lifted to human equality, nay supremacy; the man or woman who labors becomes, under the ideals towards which the Party is striving, not a laboring man or woman, but an individual equal to any other individual and entitled to a just share in all that appertains to the individual irrespective of the distinguishing adjectives, "laboring" or "leisured."

The ideals, equality of privilege, equality of opportunity, and equal share of governmental burden to the individual are the ideals that lift their thoughts above daily needs, centre them in one purpose and focus them to one set resolve—equality.

Their ideals are based on elemental justice and in proportion as those ideals become clearly defined and perfectly comprehended, so in proportion will be the strength of the force unified by the clear conception of those ideals and in proportion to its unification by the soul of its ideals, so will it become irresistible to what opposes the attainment of its ideals.'

'Thompson and Royal Charter gold...

'The ship was just three hours from its destination in Liverpool when a terrible storm drove it onto rocks.

Carrying over four hundred people and gold worth millions in today's money... tracked the specimen back to a donation to the Public Library, Melbourne, from Mr Gordon Thomson, reported in 'The Argus' in 1874. "We don't know how Thompson ended up with the gold," says Dermot. The report says that the two men met in Ireland but the nature of their transaction is not recorded.

'Thomson himself was quite a character with a habit of collecting curious things. Irish-born into a wealthy family, he spent much of his life travelling the world and amassing ethnographic objects. His "very fine mansion" in Belfast called 'Bedeque-house' held "rich stores of curiosities and relics gathered from many lands." Among the relics were at least two treasures from Victorian history from his first visit to Melbourne in 1835, when the city was in its wattle-and-daub infancy. There he befriended William Buckley, who absconded from imprisonment to live with the Aboriginal people of Port Phillip Bay for more than 20 years. Buckley gave Thomson a greenstone axe-head that had "passed 20 years of its life of usefulness in Buckley's belt." The axe head and the Royal Charter gold specimen ended up in the Belfast museum along with hundreds of other objects Thomson collected on his travels.

When Thomson decided to return to Melbourne to live, he requested that the Belfast museum return the colonial objects, believing that they rightly belonged in their home country. Thus, in 1874, they travelled back over the oceans and were deposited in Melbourne public collections. We still have the gold but Buckley's axe has been missing for many years, its whereabouts unknown. Thomson built another 'Bedeque-house' in Dudley Street, West Melbourne. His 1886 obituary mourned the "death of one of the oldest Melbourne residents."

This house, formerly known as 7 Dudley Street, is first listed in the 1866 rate book as a seven-room stone and brick house with an Average Annual Value of #60. It was owned by Andrew Agnew, who lived there for a few years, then rented it out to a succession of short-term tenants, and then, in the mid-1870s, returned to live there again.

The house was then acquired by Gordon Thomson, who lived there intermittently until the mid-1880s. In the early twentieth century, the house was occupied by

Description/Notable Features

The house at 40 Dudley Street is a double-storey Victorian terrace-style house, constructed in bluestone with a rendered facade. The hipped slate roof is concealed behind a parapet with a decorative frieze, and is penetrated by two rendered brick chimneys with corbelled cappings. There is a double-storey verandah to the front with a concave profile roof, and recent metal balustrading to the upper level. The facade has three timber-framed double-hung sash windows to the upper level, and two to the lower level. The house retains its cast iron fence.

Statement of Significance The house at 40 Dudley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic importance. Erected in the mid-1860s, it demonstrates an early and important phase of residential settlement in the area. It is one of few remaining more substantial houses which were erected in the stretch of Dudley Street directly opposite the Flagstaff Gardens. Prominently sited on a corner, with its distinctive bluestone side wall to Milton Street, the house makes a significant contribution to the streetscape.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to C. The house is substantially intact, and demonstrates the early residential development of the area. Since the previous study, the house has been restored by the reinstatement of a balcony, verandah roof and parapet frieze, all of which enhance its appearance and streetscape contribution.

William Robert (Nuttall) Maloney (1854-1940), humanitarian and politician, was born on 12 April 1854 at West Melbourne, son of Jane Maloney, née Dowling, then and later being supported by her brother-in-law W. J. T. 'Big' Clarke. Jane had married Denis Maloney in Sydney in 1847 and they later joined the Californian gold rush. Maloney was entered in the baptismal register as William's father, but he and Jane had parted. Many people came to assume that Clarke was the father and he provided for the boy in his will.

William attended a primary school in West Melbourne and the Errol Street National School. After a year in New Zealand he joined the Colonial Bank of Australia, left to spend a year or more at Scotch College, then rejoined the bank. At the Turn Verein he became an accomplished gymnast and was introduced to socialist ideas by German migrants. About 1874 he and his mother took up a selection at Longwarry, Gippsland, and over several years cleared 100 acres (40 ha).

Returning to Melbourne, Maloney attended night-school, matriculated, and in 1880 began a medical course at St Mary's Hospital, London (L.S.A., M.R.C.S., 1885). He became resident obstetric physician at St Mary's and later house surgeon at the Lock Hospital; London's poverty horrified him. He spent much time in Paris and in 1883 joined Tom Roberts and J. P. Russell on a walking tour in France and Spain; throughout his life he enjoyed associating with artists. Russell painted a fine portrait of him, now in the National Gallery of Victoria. Maloney adopted a Bohemian style: cream silk suit, red or yellow tie or bow-tie, panama hat, waxed moustache and goatee beard. He continued to travel widely all his life, eventually to Russia when 83.

He returned to Australia in 1887 and took a medical post on a Western Australian railway-construction works. Settling in North Melbourne next year he opened a general practice, and in March 1889 he was elected to the Legislative Assembly for West Melbourne on behalf of the Workingmen's Political League, largely on the railwaymen's vote. Thus he began his fifty-one-year stint as a Labor parliamentarian. Partly bound by the Trades Hall Council's programme, Maloney added woman's suffrage, old-age and invalid pensions and republicanism. That year he introduced reputedly the first bill in the Empire for woman's suffrage; in 1908, when the Victorian parliament belatedly complied, 20,000 women signed an address of gratitude to him.

Maloney's philosophy was always misty but he was essentially an international socialist in the European social democratic tradition. In the 1890s he threw himself indiscriminately into the activities of radical groups such as the Social Democratic and Single Tax leagues and the Knights of Labor, presided over May Day celebrations, and was active in the Australian Natives' Association. Then and later he was often an executive member of the Progressive Political League, the Political Labor Council and the Victorian Labor Party. A butt of the press, seeming too extreme and eccentric to be taken seriously, he was indeed rash, tending to make wild accusations which he would graciously withdraw; in January 1891 a duel with Lieutenant-Colonel Tom Price seemed imminent.

Old-age pensions was his chief cause, the anti-sweating movement next; in 1898 he chaired a royal commission on the Melbourne tramway employees' grievances, attempting to remedy outrageous working conditions, and later was president of the tramwaymen's union. On 2 November 1892 at the Melbourne Registrar's Office he had married Minnie Grace Pester (d.1934) of Ballarat; although agnostic, he insisted on Catholic baptism of their two children.

About 1896 'the Little Doctor' established at the Queen Victoria Market the North Melbourne District Medical Club (later, the Maloney Medical Institute, which continued until about 1950). In this refuge he treated for the most part a 'pathetic assortment of human wreckage'. From about 1907 he retained assistants but continued to regularly counsel the distressed. He reportedly lost his M.R.C.S. in 1897 for internationally sponsoring an 'electric healer'. He fell foul of the local branch of the British Medical Association for advertising 'advice and medicine, 3s. 6d', and probably also for his support for Mrs Bessie Smyth's campaign for birth control.

In 1901 Maloney stood for the Federal electorate of Melbourne and was soundly beaten by Sir Malcolm McEacharn. In 1903 he stood again and lost narrowly; on appeal a new election was granted and in March 1904, amid intense excitement, he defeated McEacharn by 810 votes; Sir Rupert Clarke was prominent on his platform. Maloney held the seat until his death, blocking the ambition of A. A. Calwell, who however greatly admired him. He was one of the 'torpedo brigade' which aimed to found the Commonwealth Bank; King O'Malley and Andrew Fisher were both his good friends. He was temporary chairman of committees (1910-17), a member of royal commissions on the pearling industry (1913) and the electoral laws (1914), of the joint committee on public accounts (1914-17) and of caucus executive (1914-31). He supported the White Australia policy and became obsessed with the Japanese threat. He was an anti-militarist, however, who vehemently resisted participation in the South African War, but joined the Australian National Defence League in 1906. He unhappily took more than his share of recruiting campaigning in World War I, but was a staunch anti-conscriptionist.

Maloney was often regarded as a light-weight politician and was never a serious contender for ministerial rank. Passing crazes such as bimetalism and Douglas Credit attracted him. Yet he was long before his time as campaigner for pensions, the maternity allowance and child endowment. He was essentially a social worker, not a class hater; he loved humankind, fought inequality and pressed the rights and needs of the poor.

He continued his fund-raising and his care for children, the aged, the unemployed and returned soldiers; he was president of the League of Child Helpers and, in the Depression, of the Melbourne Unemployed Committee. He gave away much of his income. In 1935 he made a film, as an appeal for milk for crèches and free kindergartens. About one thousand people of diverse backgrounds attended the eightieth birthday celebration in the town hall of one of Melbourne's best-loved citizens. In 1940 Maloney led the eight-hour day procession as the senior Labor pioneer. He died at St Kilda on 29 August that year and, after a state funeral, was cremated. His son and daughter survived him.

History

This house, formerly known as 7 Dudley Street, is first listed in the 1866 rate book as a seven-room stone and brick house with an Average Annual Value of £60. It was owned by Andrew Agnew, who lived there for a few years, then rented it out to a succession of short-term tenants, and then, in the mid-1870s, returned to live there again. The house was then acquired by Gordon Thompson, who lived there intermittently until the mid-1880s. In the early twentieth century, the house was occupied by Dr William Maloney, MLA, and later by Lieutenant T B Gough and his wife, Eveline. who, according to the directory listing, was the editor of the Arena-Sun. In the 1910s, Mrs Florence King operated the premises as a boarding house.

Description

The house at 40 Dudley Street is a double-storey Victorian terrace-style house, constructed in bluestone with a rendered facade. The hipped slate roof is concealed behind a parapet with a decorative frieze, and is penetrated by two rendered brick chimneys with corbelled cappings. There is a double-storey verandah to the front with a concave profile roof, and recent metal balustrading to the upper level. The facade has three timber-framed double-hung sash windows to the upper level, and two to the lower level. The house retains its cast iron fence.

Significance

The house at 40 Dudley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic importance. Erected in the mid-1860s, it demonstrates an early and important phase of residential settlement in the area. It is one of few remaining more substantial houses which were erected in the stretch of Dudley Street directly opposite the Flagstaff Gardens. Prominently sited on a corner, with its distinctive bluestone side wall to Milton Street, the house makes a significant contribution to the streetscape.

Grading Review

Upgraded from E to C. The house is substantially intact, and demonstrates the early residential development of the area. Since the previous study, the house has been restored by the reinstatement of a balcony, verandah roof and parapet frieze, all of which enhance its appearance and streetscape contribution.

Description/Notable Features

A once elegant Victorian row-house, tall and generously proportioned. Although somewhat altered, it includes distinctive features which add to its heritage value. The ground floor colonnade includes full and elongated arch forms, mixed with a both a slender cast iron column and brick piers with render mouldings. On the first floor, the double hung window extends to the verandah level with and elegant panelled base, and above, the parapet has a particularly unusual sinuous form. It is not clear whether this is a later, perhaps early twentieth century adaptation, or a part of the original form. The building has several alterations, principally the modification of the first floor verandah. However there are also subsequent alterations. Some have occurred between 1983 and July 1999, probably without a permit, including further modification of the first floor verandah railing, removal of ground floor iron railing and removal of the render and rendered mouldings to the ground floor. Other have occurred since July 1999, including the removal of the distinctive panelled double hung window to the first floor and replacement with a modern door, and probable change to the front door. These alterations are also unlikely to have a permit.

Statement of Significance

This section of Dudley Street addresses the Flagstaff Gardens opposite with higher quality construction. It represents the southern edge of the residential form of North Melbourne and forms a clear boundary between the high-density central city area and its residential fringe. This building is part of a group of buildings of a similar period, scale and detailing which contributes to these characteristics.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments

This building has unusual features which add to its significance. It is a part of a group of similar period, style and type, which marks the boundary between the high-density central city area and its residential fringe. The high value of the collective group in this street reinforces the value to this individual building. Recommended for D grading.

Rich Hill Terrace was built for John Harbison in 1862, as rental properties, although the Italianate style of the houses suggests it may have been extended or refurbished later, possibly in the 1880s. John Harbison was born in County Armagh, Ireland, and arrived in Melbourne in 1849. He acquired land and was elected to the Melbourne City Council in 1860 becoming an Alderman in 1863. He had two terms as a Member of the Legislative Assembly for West Melbourne in 1864-65 and North Melbourne 1866

Description/Notable Features

The building at 58-64 Dudley Street is a row of double-storey Victorian terrace houses. The walls are of rendered masonry with rustication at the ground floor level, and the hipped corrugated galvanised steel roofs are concealed behind a parapet. Each facade has a pair of French windows to the upper level, and a six-panelled timber entry door with fanlight to one side of a timber-framed double-hung sash window at ground floor level. The double-storey verandahs have cast iron balustrades and friezes. Alterations include the removal of the verandah roof to and the installation of two canvas awnings over the windows of No. 60, while much of the fabric of the balcony and verandah of No. 58 is not original, having been reconstructed in the late 1980s.

Statement of Significance

Rich Hill Terrace, at 58-64 Dudley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The houses represent the more substantial speculative housing which was erected in the area in the Victorian period. The houses are substantially intact and, as a group, make a positive contribution to the streetscape. The association of the terrace with engineer John Monash and politician John Harbison is of note.

Recommended Alterations

Restore cast-iron verandah (verandah roof on 58, 60, 64; restore fence on 58; repaint in original or typical colours; restore missing details such as parapet urns and joinery. Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The terrace is a notable group within the streetscape. The alterations are reversible.

Integrity - Presumably urns have been removed from the parapet (see entablature); the cast-iron verandah has been removed wholly or in part from 58, 60 and 64: 58-60 have been generally renovated; the fence of 58 has been replaced.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a varied but generally early streetscape between Milton and King Streets.

Soldier, Engineer, Administrator & Civil Servant

Born on 27 June 1865 at Richhill Terrace - 58 Dudley Street, West Melbourne, the son of Prussian-born Jewish parents Louis Monasch (1831-94, Melbourne General Cemetery), merchant and Bertha née Manasse; after Louis was naturalised in April 1856 he anglicised the name to Monash (pronounced Monash). Monash was educated at Scotch College (1877-81) in a class that included (Sir) James McCay (Box Hill Cemetery), later to figure so controversially during the First World War. He was dux of his class in his final year before studying Arts, Engineering and Law at Melbourne University (B.C.E., 1891; M.C.E., 1893; B.A., LL.B., 1895), but not without struggle; he abandoned his studies all together in 1885 due to his mother's death and short of money found work as an engineer working on the Princes Bridge (1885-88) and in charge of the Outer Circle suburban railway (1888-90). By the eve of the Great War, after experiencing business hardships and failures, Monash was now a pillar of Melbourne society with a reputation as a leading civil-engineer specialising in reinforced concrete constructions and president of the Victorian Institute of Engineers. While at university, Monash joined the 4th Battalion, Victorian Rifles in July 1884 and later the North Melbourne Battery after the former unit was disbanded in July 1886. At the outbreak of World War One, he held the rank of colonel and in September 1914 was appointed to command the finest brigade of the 1st A.I.F - the 4th Brigade. He oversaw the units' operations at Gallipoli where he developed a reputation for thoroughness and sound staff work, even though he had no role in the planning of many failures that characterised the campaign. The higher in rank, the better Monash performed. Promoted in July 1915 to brigadier-general, he oversaw the brigade's transfer to France the following June and the following month was promoted to command the newly formed 3rd Division at Salsbury Plain, England.

SURVEYED PLACES

Having instilled discipline and a sense of pride, the first major battle at Messines on 7 June 1917 was an overwhelming success due to the meticulous planning in spite of German knowledge of the impending attack. Later at Broodseinde Ridge in October, the division took part in what was the most successful operation yet undertaken by the A.I.F in the war. These successes and Monash's brilliant grasp of the tactical situation brought upon by the great German breakthroughs of March and April 1918, led to his appointment as Corps Commander on 31 May 1918, but not after being vigorously opposed by the official war historian Charles Bean (1879-1968) and (Sir) Keith Murdoch (1885-1952) who both favoured Major-General (Sir) Cyril White (1876-1940) causing immense distraction to the higher commanders during a vital period of the war. No finer man was more amply suited to the role of leading the Corps during the great decisive victories of 1918; his dogma was to simply feed the troops on victory. His greatest achievement was at Hamel on 4 July 1918, described as the first modern battle in which the tanks, infantry, artillery and airforce acted in cohesion. The following month this was again repeated on a larger and more successful scale during the Second Battle of Amiens on 8 August, a classic set-piece battle considered the greatest success of the war in both material captured, prisoners taken, ground gained and more importantly in moral to the Allied cause. Knighted in the field on 12 August 1918 by King George V, Monash's greatness as a commander was due to his forceful personality that induced respect enabling him to drive the most out of his men; his personal qualities of humility, intellectual capacity, orderly thinking and articulateness; a brilliant grasp of tactics and technical mastery of all arms; meticulous battle planning and organisation; and a fair portion of luck and good timing that eluded his contemporaries. But nor was Monash infallible: he never once visited the front line to gain a grasp of the ground; he had a tendency to ignore the advice of more informed junior commanders and had a reputation for bullying and ruthlessness during a battle; and was known as a showman who craved publicity and honours. After the armistice, Monash was given charge of repatriating some 160,000 troops in less than eight months considered a remarkable achievement. In his final years, he took on the chairmanship of the State Electricity Commission (1920-31) overseeing the arduous task of building a great public utility to supply abundant cheap electricity and freeing the state from the reliance on unreliable and costly power from New South Wales. Residing at Iona - 33 St. George's Road, Toorak, Monash died from coronary vascular disease on 8 October 1931; an estimated 250,000 mourners paid tribute with some 50,000 alone at the cemetery.

City of Melbourne Heritage Review (1999)

History

Rich Hill Terrace was built for John Harbison in 1862, as rental properties, although the Italianate style of the houses suggests it may have been extended or refurbished later, possibly in the 1880s. John Harbison was born in County Armagh, Ireland, and arrived in Melbourne in 1849. He acquired land and was elected to the Melbourne City Council in 1860 becoming an Alderman in 1863. He had two terms as a Member of the Legislative Assembly for West Melbourne in 1864-65 and North Melbourne 1866

Description

level, and the hipped corrugated galvanised steel roofs are concealed behind a parapet. Each facade has a pair of French windows to the upper level, and a six-panelled timber entry door with fanlight to one side of a timber-framed double-hung sash window at ground floor level. The double-storey verandahs have cast iron balustrades and friezes. Alterations include the removal of the verandah roof to and the installation of two canvas awnings over the windows of No. 60, while much of the fabric of the balcony and verandah of No. 58 is not original, having been reconstructed in the late 1980s.

Significance

Rich Hill Terrace, at 58-64 Dudley Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The houses represent the more substantial speculative housing which was erected in the area in the Victorian period. The houses are substantially intact and, as a group, make a positive contribution to the streetscape. The association of the terrace with engineer John Monash and politician John Harbison is of note.

Grading Review

Upgraded from E to D. The terrace is a notable group within the streetscape. The alterations are reversible. Integrity - Presumably urns have been removed from the parapet (see entablature); the cast-iron verandah has been removed wholly or in part from 58, 60 and 64: 58-60 have been generally renovated; the fence of 58 has been replaced. Streetscape - Contributing part of a varied but generally early streetscape between Milton and King Streets.

`Single storey brick industrial building built around 1930.'

Morris Register of Victoria website, 2016

<http://moreg.org.au/>

`RUSKIN

...Most Morris cars of the period (Interwar) to be seen in Australia, would have bodywork from one of the many coachbuilders who took advantage of the policy of allowing the import of motor cars in chassis form while complete cars carried a penal import duty. One such body builder was Ruskin Motor Bodies Ltd., of Dudley Street, West Melbourne in Victoria.

SURVEYED PLACES

Ruskins evolved out of the early Melbourne motor business of Tarrant Motors which appeared during the first decade of the 20th century, spawning several operating subsidiaries including Smith's coach building business in Queensbridge Street, South Melbourne in 1903. Four years later the motor body department moved to larger premises in Exhibition Street, Melbourne and adopted the title the "Melbourne Motor Body Works".

In 1909 larger premises in Lygon Street were acquired when contracts were obtained from Fords. There followed further expansion with a new factory in Lonsdale Street during the First World War. In 1925 the Ford contract came to an end when Ford built their own plant at Geelong and the Melbourne Motor Body Works concentrated on the manufacture of bodies for a range of British and American car chassis. In 1929, the trade depression hit hard and a workforce of 400 fell to just 40. In February 1930 the company changed its name to Ruskin Motor Bodies Pty Ltd. The new name was derived from that of the famous English author, John Ruskin (1819 – 1900), and the company exemplified its ideals from the quotation by that author. "All works of taste must bear a price in proportion to the skill, time expense and risk attending their invention and manufacture. These things called dear are, when just estimated, the cheapest. They are attended with much less profit to the artist than those which everybody calls cheap. A disposition of cheapness and not for excellence of workmanship is most frequent and certain cause of the decay and destruction of arts and manufacture."

As "Ruskin Motor Bodies Pty Ltd," bodies were made on numerous chassis and it would have been during this period that Colin MacDonald's Ten Four was bodied. A contract was made with Morris Motors Ltd. and another with Hudson for their Tarraplane chassis. These two make accounted for much of the firm's workload up to the outbreak of the war when, in common with most of the Australian motor industry, the company became involved in defence requirements, increasing its workforce to 600 in the process.'

STADIUM BUILDING TO START AT ONCE

By HAROLD BALFE

CONSTRUCTION of new Melbourne Stadium, to replace the old stadium destroyed by fire on January 24, will begin at once with erection of steelwork by Vickers Ruwolt, of Richmond.

Mr. R. Lean, general manager, Stadiums Pty. Ltd., said yesterday if no problems arose to cause delays, the new stadium should be ready by the end of September. Mr. Lean said: "We must be back on the job with a minimum of delay. Within the next few months we will have arriving, a number of leading boxers from overseas. "Because of this we have had to considerably modify original plans providing for an elaborate and costly stadium that would have taken a long time to build. "When the original stadium was built 42 years ago, in eight weeks, it cost £30,000. But the new place will cost at, least four times as much.

Much better however, the new Melbourne Stadium will answer all requirements for boxing; wrestling, and entertainment, and full consideration will be given to spectator comfort. Reconstruction according to present plans will require considerably more steelwork than originally intended.

Other contractors will move in on the job as soon as the steelwork is erected by Ruwolts.

Part of the old brick walls will be retained, and the rest of the work will mainly be carpentering.

In design the new stadium will be similar to the old one, but it will be extended to take in the lane that runs between Dudley and Roslyn sts., at the eastern end.

This will allow seating to be increased from 9,000 to 10,000. Vastly improved, seating arrangements will include a ringside area of 5,000 tubular steel chairs. There will be more up-to-date dressing room and public convenience accommodation.

The new stadium will be air-conditioned and later sound-proofed. '

Festival Hall is a concert and sporting venue, located at 300 Dudley Street, West Melbourne, Victoria, Australia. It is one of Melbourne's larger concert venues and has hosted a variety of local and international acts over many years.

Formerly known as the West Melbourne Stadium (shortened to The Stadium), it was originally built in 1915 by John Wren[1] (Chairman) and Dick Lean (General Manager) of Stadiums Ltd as a multi-function venue for boxing and pro wrestling. It quickly became known to locals as "the House of Stoush", as over the years some of the greatest names in Australian boxing have duked it out, including Lionel Rose, Johnny Famechon, Anthony Mundine, Lester Ellis and Barry Michael. pro Wrestling also featured regularly, as did Roller Derby, ballroom dancing, cultural and religious gatherings, and the first Indoor Tennis Exhibition featuring John McEnroe. It was used by the Painters and Dockers as a meeting place, and during the Great Depression, unemployed men seeking work would gather at Festival Hall to be picked for dock work.

Hollywood Legend, Judy Garland played there for her 1964 tour. After being over an hour late, Garland stormed of the stage and was rushed back to the Southern Cross Hotel. It made headlines worldwide.

'The Stadium' was destroyed by fire in 1955 but was rebuilt in time for the 1956 Olympics, where it was used for boxing, basketball, and gymnastics events.[2][3]

Dick Lean Jnr, (son of the original General Manager, Dick Lean) joined Stadiums in 1960 and set about successful promotion of major music acts of all genres from both the U.K. and U.S.A, increasing the use of the venue significantly. 'The Stadium' was renamed 'Festival Hall' in the early 1960s to reflect its increasing use as Melbourne's largest live entertainment venue at the time.

Since its renovation Festival Hall's versatile set-up has been used for many events including its weekly conversion into Australia's largest television studio for the production of The Price is Right for Seven Network.

Festival Hall can be used for fully seated events of up to 4,586 including the main floor or for up to 5,445 if the floor is used for standing, sight lines permitting. The addition of floor-to-ceiling curtains around the main floor and between the side sections allows seating for up to 1,741 people or 2,600 standing on the main floor in intimate surrounds with the use of the balcony area opposite the stage above the main floor entrance providing an additional 272 seats. The main floor has an area of 1,288 m², providing ample room for comfortable dining for up to 1,000 seated guests plus dance floor, and the stage offers a further 160 m² of elevated space. Festival Hall has been used for black tie dinners, product launches, conferences, motivation sessions, art exhibitions, large Christmas parties, religious and cultural events, and even as an examination venue for Swinburne University. Festival Hall has a strong presence on the web with a fan group at Facebook and even a Twitter account...

 Description/Notable Features

A two-storey stuccoed brick house with a one-level cast-iron verandah and iron picket fence. Detail is sparse but includes opening-architraves, sill brackets and a cornice. The verandah roof is concave and the house roof line parapeted. The whole appears earlier than the documented date, with the iron verandah added later, much in the style of the other Cullen buildings in Eades Place. Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration, verandah roof and structure. Chimney appears earlier.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of little individual importance, except at a simple evocation of the period, but obtains importance from its streetscape contribution: of regional importance. Historically, associated with Sam Cullen, one of the brothers who virtually built this entire streetscape and an owner-builder which is typical of the study area: of regional interest.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint in original or typical colours.

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally original.

Streetscape - Contributive part of a highly cohesive and early residential streetscape.

Description/Notable Features

A generally altered, two-storey stuccoed and parapeted brick row of 4, with one level verandahs and formerly, picket fences. Ornament is sparse, consisting of architraved openings, bracketed sills and a plain cornice. The row is set back from the frontage. Notable features include round head picket fence dividing properties c1900. Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of low integrity but contributive to a streetscape. Historically, one of the Cullen brothers developments, who built virtually all of the street and were one of the many owner-builders in the area: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Restore openings and verandahs as evidence suggests or as 8-10; rebuilt front picket fences to match side fences and remnant posts; repaint in original or typical colours.

Fence (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) air conditioning unit (inappropriate - remove by approved method) verandah altered (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally altered with all timber picket front fences gone but side fences remaining; verandahs have been rebuilt on 12,14,18 and replaced on 16; openings have been altered on 16.

Streetscape - Contributive part of a highly cohesive

History

This row, built 1871-2, is another of the developments in Eades Place undertaken by the Cullen brothers, Samuel and Henry, none of whom actually lived in these houses. They were leased to a number of tenants before 1896, including James Booth, Robert Dalrymple, William Travis, John Marshall and William Robertson.

Description

A generally altered, two-storey stuccoed and parapeted brick row of 4, with one level verandahs and formerly, picket fences. Ornament is sparse, consisting of architraved openings, bracketed sills and a plain cornice. The row is set back from the frontage. Notable features include round head picket fence dividing properties c1900.

Integrity - Generally altered with all timber picket front fences gone but side fences remaining; verandahs have been rebuilt on 12,14,18 and replaced on 16; openings have been altered on 16.

Streetscape - Contributive part of a highly cohesive streetscape.

Significance

Architecturally, of low integrity but contributive to a streetscape. Historically, one of the Cullen brothers developments, who built virtually all of the street and were one of the many owner-builders in the area: of local importance.

Recommendations

Restore openings and verandahs as evidence suggests or as 8-10; rebuilt front picket fences to match side fences and remnant posts; repaint in original or typical colours. Fence (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) air conditioning unit (inappropriate - remove by approved method) verandah

Description/Notable Features

Edward Williams acted as owner-builder for this dichrome brick and stuccoed, two-storey row house. An austere segment-arched entablature, at the parapet, and flanking scrolls comprises, with the vermiculated side walls, the only stucco decoration; 'quoins' being achieved in contrasting brick colours (cream, brown). A cast-iron verandah frieze brackets and a front fence survive.

Notable features include the verandah, brick finish and the fence.

Statement of Significance Architecturally, of little significance except as a near original example of a common form: of local importance. Historically, little is known of Edward Williams: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint trim in typical or original colours. Bricks part painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method)

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally original except perhaps, for parapet urns.

Streetscape - Contrasting in colour but matching the other houses in form, siting and detail in this residential precinct.

Description/Notable Features

A storey was added to 30, 32, in 1872-3, as was also the case with 28, in c1880. A two-storey, stuccoed and parapeted brick row of 3 houses which shows clearly the above stages of development by its upper fenestration. A bullnose, slatted frieze verandah of c1915 has replaced the previous, presumably, concave roof verandahs. The cornice is plain: architraves and bracketed sills being the only ornament, as 12-18 (qv). Notable features include verandah added c1915.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of little individual importance but, as a Cullen Brothers' product, is synonymous with much of the streetscape; of local importance. Historically, contains the first three houses constructed by the Cullens in the street, although these have been added to since, and is sited on the Cullen's land grant: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

SURVEYED PLACES

Retain verandah but investigate evidence for and feasibility of replacement with a period type i.e. as 8-10; replace picket fences, using pickets at 12-18 as a model; repaint in typical or original colours.

Other Comments Integrity - The verandah has been added c1915, replacing a previous one; the presumed timber picket front and dividing fences have been replaced; and horizontal balustrading has been placed at the verandah perimeter.

horizontal balustrading has been placed at the verandah perimeter.

Streetscape - A contributive part of a highly cohesive streetscape.

Significance

Architecturally, of little individual importance but, as a Cullen Brothers' product, is synonymous with much of the streetscape; of local importance. Historically, contains the first three houses constructed by the Cullens in the street, although these have been added to since, and is sited on the Cullen's land grant: of local importance.

Recommendations

Retain verandah but investigate evidence for and feasibility of replacement with a period type i.e. as 8-10; replace picket fences, using pickets at 12-18 as a model; repaint in typical or original colours.

Description/Notable Features

A storey was added to 30, 32, in 1872-3, as was also the case with 28, in c1880. A two-storey, stuccoed and parapeted brick row of 3 houses which shows clearly the above stages of development by its upper fenestration. A bullnose, slatted frieze verandah of c1915 has replaced the previous, presumably, concave roof verandahs. The cornice is plain: architraves and bracketed sills being the only ornament, as 12-18 (qv). Notable features include verandah added c1915.

Statement of Significance Architecturally, of little individual importance but, as a Cullen Brothers' product, is synonymous with much of the streetscape; of local importance. Historically, contains the first three houses constructed by the Cullens in the street, although these have been added to since, and is sited on the Cullen's land grant: of local importance.

Other Comments

Integrity - The verandah has been added c1915, replacing a previous one; the presumed timber picket front and dividing fences have been replaced; and horizontal balustrading has been placed at the verandah perimeter. Streetscape - A contributive part of a highly cohesive streetscape.

Description/Notable Features

A two-storeyed stuccoed and brick parapeted row of four houses, each of different construction date (and owner in 34,38), but all appearing to be part of a whole. Due to the acquisition by Munn of 36-8, 40 was added by him to match 38.: the same philosophy may have determined a general match to 34 by 36 when Munn built the latter six years after the former. All have simple parapet cornices, are built to the street alignment, possess symmetrical fenestration and utilise, albeit misaligned, string-moulds. Shutters and paired doorways are in common but 34,36 have parapet entablatures, gabled and arched with scrolls and dates, where 38-40 have not. Notable features include shutters and on street siting.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, each is original, simply ornamented and fenestrated which is typical of the date of the initial buildings of the group but not the later two (36.40) and thus the group may be an early expression of the desire for visual cohesion: of regional significance. Historically, Further examples of the owner-builder predominance in the study area: of local importance.

match 38.: the same philosophy may have determined a general match to 34 by 36 when Munn built the latter six years after the former. All have simple parapet cornices, are built to the street alignment, possess symmetrical fenestration and utilise, albeit misaligned, string-moulds. Shutters and paired doorways are in common but 34,36 have parapet entablatures, gabled and arched with scrolls and dates, where 38-40 have not. Notable features include shutters and on street siting.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, each is original, simply ornamented and fenestrated which is typical of the date of the initial buildings of the group but not the later two (36.40) and thus the group may be an early expression of the desire for visual cohesion: of regional significance. Historically, Further examples of the owner-builder predominance in the study area: of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint in original or typical colours; record shutter details. Door replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative)

Other Comments

Integrity - Generally original except for possible parapet urns on 36.

Streetscape - A high streetscape affinity to each other and other similarly simply elevated buildings in the street i.e. 28-32, 8-10, in this cohesive residential streetscape.

'The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Tuesday 1 November 1887

'CITY COUNCIL ELECTIONS. Mr. J. W. PEIRCE AT WEST MELBOURNE

Mr. J. W. Peirce, the retiring councillor for Bourke Ward, met about 30 ratepayers at the James Watt Hotel, Spencer-street, last night. Dr. Lloyd occupied the chair. Mr. Peirce said that when he sought election three years ago he made many promises to the ratepayers, but he had never broken faith with them. It was in consequence of his action in the City Council that 75 extra lamps were erected in the ward, and the Flagstaff-gardens were improved, so that citizens could take their wives through them at night time. The 350 trees recently planted in the streets of the ward were the outcome of his energies. It had been proposed to erect a refrigerating room in the reserve of the Victoria Market, but he thought the land would be turned to better account if shops were erected on it, and he had this done. The shops already opened were returning 12 per cent, on the money expended on them. He acted on four committees of the council, and read a return of attendances to show that he was most regular. The work of the council was really done in committee, and not by those gentlemen who aired their eloquence at council meetings. It had always been his object to keep down the rating on citizens, and the council would soon be in such a position that it would not know what to do with its money. The Western Market would soon be acquired by it, and the returns which would be received from it would pay the expenditure of one ward.... While for 28 years their members of Parliament had been promising to obtain for them a recreation reserve, he had done so within six months of his election, and that was for no other reason than that he exercised some influence in both Parliament and the council.'

'The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Monday 2 July 1906

ARBOR DAY, North and West Melbourne

'...The tree planting portion of the day's programme was then taken in hand, trees being planted by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Director of Education, Messrs. Aikman and Edgar, members of the board of advice and others.

At the King-street school, West Melbourne, Arbor day was also duly observed. The morning was occupied in lessons bearing on trees and their cultivation, and in the afternoon the board of advice attended, and a squad of cadets paraded with the flag, and the bugle band played. Trees were planted in the ground, and a large number of visitors were present.'

'WEST MELBOURNE, 1866

During the ministry of the Rev. James Taylor, Collins Street was the centre of much evangelistic activity. At one period six branch Sunday Schools were in operation and the members of the Preachers' Class conducted many Gospel services. One of the schools was at Chetwynd Street, North Melbourne, then known as Hotham. There the scholars numbered 130, and a Church was formed, of which the Rev. S. Finkelstein was pastor in 1868 and the Rev. G. P. Lush in 1869. When the school building in Chetwynd Street proved too small, the work was transferred to the Common School in Errol Street. As the congregation grew, land was acquired in Hawke Street, West Melbourne, and a good stone building erected. This was opened by the Rev. J. Taylor in March 1866. At that time a young evangelist, Waiter Douglas arrived from London via New Zealand, and was asked to carry on the work. . This he did with great earnestness. A continuous Mission was maintained from July to November 1866. So the West Melbourne Church was cradled in evangelism. Many conversions resulted, and the Sunday School flourished. In 1870 the Church was formally constituted by the Rev. [James Martin, and became independent of Collins Street. The leaders of the School were Mr. T. MacFarlane and D. Hamilton, of Collins Street, and in course of time the scholars numbered 500. The pastors were Revs. W. Garner (1870) and H. Phillips (1873). In 1882 a Sunday School and preaching station were opened at West Footscray by earnest young men from the West Melbourne Church. Ten years after the Church was opened the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon was written to regarding a pastor, and at his instigation the Rev. A. J. Clarke became the minister of West Melbourne. He was an earnest evangelist, the congregations increased, and the transept was added to the building. The following have been the pastors since Mr. Clarke's time:-W. C. Bunning, E. Isaac, E. Harris, H. Clark, E. L. Watson, F. J. Miles, T. P. Tringham, E. Bungey, S. Blackney, T. V. Paul and the present pastor, J. Curtis, Among the leading workers whose names should not be forgotten were Daniel Hamilton, S.S. Superintendent for many years; Robert Self, for 52 years deacon and local preacher; R. Hannaford, for 28 years S.S. Superintendent; A. Matthews, leader of the Young Men's Bible Class; D. Locke, deacon for many years; and T. Mathers, Church Secretary for about 40 years, with their wives and many gracious women. With such a history and with such pastors and fellow-labourers, it is no wonder that for many years West Melbourne was one of the most important in the Denomination, but in the course of years its surroundings have completely changed. It has ceased to be a desirable residential district; many of its members moved away to Footscray, Newmarket, &c., and others have not yet been received in their place. Possibly in coming years some at least of the former experiences may be revived. '

First Owner

Over a period of two years (1870-72) these row houses were built for John Marley. He owned them until c1890, after which they passed into the hands of Thomas

McDonald who was the manager of the Colonial Bank in Victoria Street. The residents included John Marley and his wife in 33 Hawke Street (1872-c1890); Arthur Pretty who moved from here to Chetwynd Street in 1883 (Refer to 62-4 Chetwynd Street); and others such as James

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

Single fronted and transverse gabled roof (slated) row houses, formerly of polychrome brick and possessing iron picket fences and verandahs. Notable features include the verandah and fence.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of little individual importance, although early for coloured brick construction, but contributing to one of the rare streetscapes in West Melbourne: of local importance. Historically, an early speculative row where the developer resided in one of the houses: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Remove paint from bricks, repaint trim in typical or original colours; restore iron if evidence available.

Verandah detail removed (inappropriate - reinstate as original/sympathetic alternative to the original)

Other Comments

Integrity - Cast-iron (presumed) decoration has been removed and the brickwork painted.

Streetscape - Part of an altered but cohesive residential

streetscape.

 Single fronted and transverse gabled roof (slated) row houses, formerly of polychrome brick and possessing iron picket fences and verandahs. Notable features include the verandah and fence.
 Statement of Significance
 Architecturally, of little individual importance, although early for coloured brick construction, but contributing to one of the rare streetscapes in West Melbourne: of local importance. Historically, an early speculative row where the developer resided in one of the houses: of local interest.
 Recommended Alterations
 Remove paint from bricks, repaint trim in typical or original colours; restore iron if evidence available.
 Verandah detail removed (inappropriate - reinstate as original/sympathetic alternative to the original)
 Other Comments
 Integrity - Cast-iron (presumed) decoration has been removed and the brickwork painted.
 Streetscape - Part of an altered but cohesive residential streetscape.

Description/Notable Features

A two-storey, face-brick and plain parapeted row house with a cast-iron verandah of two levels and an iron picket fence: the iron pattern is notable. Notable features include fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early example of a common house type of limited integrity but which contributes to a streetscape: of local importance. Historically, little is known of Woodham (perhaps a librarian?) : of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Remove paint from bricks; repaint trim as original or typical. Bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) balustrade part gone, frieze gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Other Comments

Integrity - The bricks have been painted and the parapet may have been altered.

Streetscape - Contributing part of one of West Melbourne's rare residential streetscapes.

'Architect Victoria'

Winter 2012: 14

'Official Journal of the Australian Institute of Architects Victorian Chapter'...

'This was in the Hamer period of Liberal government, as was the infill phase, the next stage in Government housing, at its outset. This saw a complete refocus on the single or two-storeyed house, as a terrace, dropped into a row of other houses, or continuing a suburban street pattern. Here a convergence of later ideas was brought to bear: mixed urban use as prescribed by Jane Jacobs in 1963¹⁷ seemed more reachable

if you integrated new housing visually within older suburbs. And concerns about social stigma of conspicuously different housing projects could be addressed by embedding new houses in established streets. The revision of a-contextual modernism, and its excessive focus on industrial and production imagery, could be addressed by a return to contextual linkage through older and distinctively local textures, colour, material and forms. The Carlton and North Fitzroy housing of Station, Kay, and Canning Streets, the incursions there by Edmond and Corrigan, Greg Burgess, Peter Crone and Norman Day, accompanied by the act of buying older houses (establishing a new social role and meaning in that process).

By 1983-4 this genre had expanded to larger groupings of 26, as with Leo development Jong's Public Works development in North Melbourne of up to over 100 or more units; also Cox and Carmichael's Highbett development... (image) Capel Street Housing, West Melbourne, Peter Elliott (1988).¹

First Owner

Henry McKersie had this row built as an investment in 1883. He continued to own it until after 1895 and leased it to such folk as Mrs. Addison and Ann McIntyre. Renowned architect, J.A.B. Koch and local builder, Charles Nott, were responsible for design and construction of the pair.

Condition Fair

Original Building Type

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

A two-storey stuccoed brick row house pair with a two-level cast-iron verandah and transverse gabled roof line, behind a bracketed and corniced parapet. Pronounced brackets and transverse chimney shafts, combined with the parapet ornament, distinguish this design from others by builders. Notable features include the verandah.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, originally of a design which presented subtle variations on what is a common theme, but limited integrity of 41 and additions to 39 determine that it is of local importance and contributive to a streetscape only.

Historically, little is known of the developer or his tenants: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Replace wall with timber or iron pickets, as evidence suggests; repaint in typical or original colours. Fence (inappropriate - reinstate as original/sympathetic alternative to the original)

Other Comments

Integrity - 41 has been altered with the verandah and fence replaced; 39 is generally original with its presumed timber picket fence replaced by a high brick wall.

Streetscape - Contributive part of one of West Melbourne's few streetscapes.

History
Henry McKersie had this row built as an investment in 1883. He continued to own it until after 1895 and leased it to such folk as Mrs. Addison and Ann McIntyre. Renowned architect, J.A.B. Koch and local builder, Charles Nott, were responsible for design and construction of the pair.

Integrity - 41 has been altered with the verandah and fence replaced; 39 is generally original with its presumed timber picket fence replaced by a high brick wall.

Streetscape - Contributive part of one of West Melbourne's few streetscapes.

Description

A two-storey stuccoed brick row house pair with a two-level cast-iron verandah and transverse gabled roof line, behind a bracketed and corniced parapet. Pronounced brackets and transverse chimney shafts, combined with the parapet ornament, distinguish this design from others by builders. Notable features include the verandah.

Significance

Architecturally, originally of a design which presented subtle variations on what is a common theme, but limited integrity of 41 and additions to 39 determine that it is of local importance and contributive to a streetscape only.

Historically, little is known of the developer or his tenants: of local interest.

Recommendations

Replace wall with timber or iron pickets, as evidence suggests; repaint in typical or original colours.

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

The house at 55 Hawke Street is a single-storey, single-fronted Victorian house with a transverse gabled roof behind a rendered pedimented parapet. The verandah has cast iron decoration and spans between wing walls which are ornamented with decorative pine cones and rendered consoles. Alterations include the recladding of the roof in glazed terracotta tiles, replacement of the front window and replacement of the front fence.

Statement of Significance

The house at 55 Hawke Street is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The house represents the type of modest speculative housing which proliferated in North and West Melbourne in the nineteenth century.

Aesthetically, the houses is reasonably intact and, with its neighbours, makes a positive contribution to the mixed streetscape.

Recommended Alterations

Other Comments Upgraded from E to D. The house is a reasonably intact representative of the nineteenth century workers' cottages which were constructed in large numbers in North and West Melbourne in the Victorian period. The alterations are generally reversible.

Victorian Chapter'...

This was in the Hamer period of Liberal government, as was the infill phase, the next stage in Government housing, at its outset. This saw a complete refocus on the single or two-storeyed house, as a terrace, dropped into a row of other houses, or continuing a suburban street pattern. Here a convergence of later ideas was brought to bear: mixed urban use as prescribed by Jane Jacobs in 1963¹⁷ seemed more reachable if you integrated new housing visually within older suburbs. And concerns about social stigma of conspicuously different housing projects could be addressed by embedding new houses in established streets. The revision of a-contextual modernism, and its excessive focus on industrial and production imagery, could be addressed by a return to contextual linkage through older and distinctively local textures, colour, material and forms. The Carlton and North Fitzroy housing of Station, Kay, and Canning Streets, the incursions there by Edmond and Corrigan, Greg Burgess, Peter Crone and Norman Day, accompanied by the act of buying older houses (establishing a new social role and meaning in that process).

By 1983-4 this genre had expanded to larger groupings of 26, as with Leo development Jong's Public Works development in North Melbourne of up to over 100 or more units; also Cox and Carmichael's Highett development... (image) Capel Street Housing, West Melbourne, Peter Elliott (1988).'

Architect

Builder

First Owner

John Jones, a contractor, built these houses, during 1879-81, living in 74 for the next fifteen years at least. Jones sold 76 to George Pitkethley by 1881 and 78 to Hugh Tait in the same period: Pitkethley alternately occupied and rented his house to persons such as boot retailer, William Leeming (qv), and Pat Morgan, whilst Mrs. Agnes Tait occupied 78 for many years. Of note is that Jones used architects, Ellerker and Kilburn on other work.

Integrity Fair

Condition Fair

Original Building Type

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

Three stuccoed brick, two-storey row houses with two-level cast-iron verandahs: each stepped back with the street angle, and down with its slope. 74 has a scrolled and pedimented parapet entablature above its cornice, contrasting with the plain parapets of 76-8. Apart from the normal lions heads and brackets to party wall faces, a nail-head motif re-occurs through all facades, whilst orbs were used at the parapet piers. A serpentine motif in the iron friezework is contrasted with the more formal guilloche in the balustrading. A further differentiation of 74 from 76-8 is the iron picket fence it possesses, compared with the spade-head timber picket which survives on 76. Notable features include fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early example of a common form of row house which is a near original and forms the major part of a picturesque streetscape: of regional significance. Historically, a superior example of a resident builder-developer's work, where a clear differentiation of his residence from the lease properties is made and these houses are one group of several homes built in the area between 1867-85: of regional significance.

Recommended Alterations

Replace picket fence on 78; replace urns on 74; repaint all in typical or original colours; consider rezoning to Special Residential 2 or similar, to preserve domestic use and form.

Other Comments

Integrity - The spade-head picket fence has been replaced on 78 and the parapet orbs are missing from 74.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a residential streetscape made picturesque by the stepped siting laterally and vertically and the common transverse gabled roof lines of each house 74-82 and the shared single-fronted, 19th century row house form of 68-82 Hawke Street.

Architect

Builder

First Owner

John Jones, a contractor, built these houses, during 1879-81, living in 74 for the next fifteen years at least. Jones sold 76 to George Pitkethley by 1881 and 78 to Hugh Tait in the same period: Pitkethley alternately occupied and rented his house to persons such as boot retailer, William Leeming (qv), and Pat Morgan, whilst Mrs. Agnes Tait occupied 78 for many years. Of note is that Jones used architects, Ellerker and Kilburn on other work.

Integrity Fair

Condition Fair

Original Building Type

History Not Assessed

Description/Notable Features

Three stuccoed brick, two-storey row houses with two-level cast-iron verandahs: each stepped back with the street angle, and down with its slope. 74 has a scrolled and pedimented parapet entablature above its cornice, contrasting with the plain parapets of 76-8. Apart from the normal lions heads and brackets to party wall faces, a nail-head motif re-occurs through all facades, whilst orbs were used at the parapet piers. A serpentine motif in the iron friezework is contrasted with the more formal guilloche in the balustrading. A further differentiation of 74 from 76-8 is the iron picket fence it possesses, compared with the spade-head timber picket which survives on 76. Notable features include fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early example of a common form of row house which is a near original and forms the major part of a picturesque streetscape: of regional significance. Historically, a superior example of a resident builder-developer's work, where a clear differentiation of his residence from the lease properties is made and these houses are one group of several homes built in the area between 1867-85: of regional significance.

Recommended Alterations

Replace picket fence on 78; replace urns on 74; repaint all in typical or original colours; consider rezoning to Special Residential 2 or similar, to preserve domestic use and form.

Other Comments

Integrity - The spade-head picket fence has been replaced on 78 and the parapet orbs are missing from 74.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a residential streetscape made picturesque by the stepped siting laterally and vertically and the common transverse gabled roof lines of each house 74-82 and the shared single-fronted, 19th century row house form of 68-82 Hawke Street.

Description/Notable Features

A two-storey, stuccoed brick house with a two-level cast-iron verandah, a gabled parapet entablature and an iron picket fence. Like 74-78 Hawke Street, the guilloche pattern is used in the balustrade panels and a serpentine motif in the friezes, also nail-head ornament is at the parapet, suggesting that John Jones may have constructed this house for Easton. Notable features include the fence; verandah decoration; verandah roof and structure.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early and original, if architecturally undistinguished, example of a common row house type and part of one of West Melbourne's few streetscapes: of regional importance. Historically, little is known of the owner or tenants: of local interest.

Recommended Alterations

Repaint in typical or original colours; replace urns to pattern of 74-8 Hawke Street or as evidence suggests; consider re-zoning to Special Residential 2, or similar, to preserve the house in its original use and form. Door replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design/sympathetic alternative) gate replaced (inappropriate - reinstate original design) continuing a suburban street pattern. Here a convergence of later ideas was brought to bear: mixed urban use as prescribed by Jane Jacobs in 1963¹⁷ seemed more reachable if you integrated new housing visually within older suburbs. And concerns about social stigma of conspicuously different housing projects could be addressed by embedding new houses in established streets. The revision of a-contextual modernism, and its excessive focus on industrial and production imagery, could be addressed by a return to contextual linkage through older and distinctively local textures, colour, material and forms. The Carlton and North Fitzroy housing of Station, Kay, and Canning Streets, the incursions there by Edmond and Corrigan, Greg Burgess, Peter Crone and Norman Day, accompanied by the act of buying older houses (establishing a new social role and meaning in that process).

Other Comments

Integrity - Parapet urns are missing.

By 1983-4 this genre had expanded to larger groupings of 26, as with Leo development Jong's Public Works development in North Melbourne of up to over 100 or more units; also Cox and Carmichael's Highett development... (image) Capel Street Housing, West Melbourne, Peter Elliott (1988)'

'Beginnings 1865-1919...

'The first sulphuric acid manufacture in Victoria goes probably back to 1862, when Messrs. Forbes and Co. produced it on the Yarra Bank 'in a very small way'. The enterprise was followed by Clarke and Hoffman, later Smith and Co. and finally Cuming Smith and Co., who round about 1872 built a modern, medium scale mineral acids complex producing concentrated sulphuric acid, nitric and sulphurous acid, ammonium nitrate and phosphatic fertiliser. The acid chambers were sizeable 90 x 20 x 14 feet, compared with the UK plant built shortly before then by Muspratt 120 x 24 x 20 feet. The manager of the establishment, James Cuming, the entrepreneur's son, had received his chemical education in Victoria; the firm received two gold medals at the Melbourne International Exhibition and was 'recommended for the Emperor of Germany's grand prize to the premier industry in the colony'.[11] The Victoria Bone Mills at Yarraville founded 1870 was part of this early complex.[12] Remarkably, 3 000 tonnes of calcium superphosphate were exported to Mauritius and New Zealand. Also at Yarraville were the Victorian Pyrites and Smelting Works and a substantial sugar refinery, the Victorian Sugar Company's Works, and Melbourne Woollen Mills. Nearby, at Footscray, the Apollo Company Works, established in 1873, produced organic chemicals from slaughter yards, glycerine, stearine, oleine and household soap. The company's successor in Sydney, Apollo Stearine Candle Coy., and another Melbourne soaper,[13] J. Kitchen and Sons eventually, in 1912-14, were absorbed by Lever Bros. Ltd.'

'Australasia's history

William Hesketh Lever was the first person to stamp soap with a brand name and wrap it before selling it to the public. The brand was Sunlight soap and the year was 1885. In the late 1880s, Lever Brothers Sunlight soap was first imported to NZ from the UK. In 1899, Lever Brothers began soap production at Balmain in Sydney, followed by the commencement of production in New Zealand in 1919.

On 2 September, 1929, the UK-based Lever Brothers and the Dutch union of fats and oils businesses Margarine Unie, signed an agreement to create Unilever. The businesses initially aimed to negotiate an arrangement to keep out of each other's principal interests of soap and margarine production, but ultimately decided on an amalgamation instead.

The years following saw significant expansion around the world, and Australasia was no exception. In 1959, Unilever acquired McNivens Ice Cream in Australia followed by Streets and Sennitts. In 1963, the business acquired Rosella Foods (established 1896). In 1968, the John West operation began in Australia and in 1971 Unilever acquired Lipton Tea.

Modern history

In 1982, the Rosella factory in Richmond, Victoria, closed and dry foods production transferred to Knoxfield. In 1988, the Bushells, Rosella Lipton and John West businesses combined to form Unifoods in Australia. In the same year, the New Zealand acquisitions of Oxo, Bushells, Faggs and Quality Packers merged with John West to form Unifoods NZ...'

'DIAMOND DRY CELLS.

Manufactured by the Widdis Diamond Dry Cells Proprietary, Limited, 119

Hawke street, West Melbourne. Diamond Dry Cells have earned a well deserved reputation for general excellence. In illustration of this fact it may prove of interest to quote what a representative of the Australasian manufacturer has to say:- "I tried-out three Diamond Dry Cell batteries on my two-valve set at home and found them most satisfactory in every way. In fact, they were more efficient than others I had previously used of American manufacture. The volume of sound given was something like 20 per cent greater than I had previously been receiving." This is an expression of opinion gained from practical experience, and is wholly, authentic, and indicates that dealers in wireless accessories and users cannot do better than secure Diamond Dry Cells. It is interesting, therefore, to note that Widdis Diamond Dry Cells Proprietary, Limited, have a well-equipped factory in West Melbourne, and are making many types of first-class dry cells, using Australian raw material, wherever possible. The range of standard, manufactures, four types of single cells, three round and one square, nine sizes of B battery for radio work, with voltages of 22 1/2, 45, and 90, and a C battery of 4.5 volts. In addition, cells are made if necessary to fulfil special requirements. Practically all the dry cells required by the Postal Department, the Australian Navy, the Victorian Railways, and the South Australian Government are supplied by this company. These batteries are obtainable from all radio dealers in South Australia, or from the distributor, L. A. Harper, CBS. Buildings, King William street, Adelaide. '

Newspapers:

'The Australasian' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1864 - 1946)

Saturday 1 October 1927

'GERRARD WIRE-TYING MACHINES CO. PTY. LTD.

During the year 1926 over 12 million cases of Australian products were reinforced and sealed with Gerrard wire-tying machines. Pillage prevention is a problem which the Gerrard Company, 119-125 Hawke street, West Melbourne, claim to have solved successfully with the aid of their machines and wire-seal strapping:

also the addition of saw edge corrugated fasteners. By this means one-piece lids and sides are made, and the package is sealed effectively against pillage and ullage.

The Gerrard Company make a speciality of labour-saving devices for the packing-room, which include a new automatic tacker for sealing labels to the packages; a scientific lever for opening cases without effort or damage to the wood, and also a portable lidpress for apple-packing.. Many interesting export packages' were attractively shown in their, new pavilion in Lennon avenue.'

Saturday 29 September 1928

'GERRARD WIRE TYING MACHINE PTY. LTD.

A very interesting exhibit of wire-tying machine and packing-room appliances is being shown by the Gerrard Company, 119-125 Hawke street. West Melbourne, in their attractive pavilion in Lennon avenue. The range of.

Machines includes models for tying small cartons and parcels to the heaviest bale and package, using up to 8 gauge round bands of steel. The universal adoption of this economical and effective system for binding and sealing packages by manufacturers is shown by a statement recently issued by the company.

SURVEYED PLACES

In Australia during the year 1925, six million cases were wire sealed; the following year the total increased to twelve millions, and during 1927 the amazing total of seventeen million packages were bound and scaled with the Gerrard machines. The better packing of Australian export apples is a feature of this exhibit. The standard softwood cases attractively labelled is shown in strong contrast to the stained hardwood dump, on which overseas buyers report so unfavourably. The introduction of the Adeco Lid Press facilitates easy lidding of the new case without bruising the top layers of the fruit, and the Trugrade Apple Gauge provides the best means for obtaining the "perfect pack".'

Australian Dictionary of Biography (ADB)

'Connibere, Sir Charles Wellington (1864–1941)

by Paul H. De Serville

This article was published in Australian Dictionary of Biography, Volume 8, (MUP), 1981

Sir Charles Wellington Connibere (1864-1941),

businessman and philanthropist, was born on 6 February 1864 at St Kilda, Melbourne, son of George Connibere, Devon-born draper and later mayor of St Kilda, and his wife Emma Joan, née Richards, from Somerset. Charles and his two brothers Ernest William Richards (1862-1957), and Frederick George (1868-1945) started in a small way as softgoods merchants in 1889, under the name of Connibere, Grieve & Connibere. Their partner, John Grieve (father of Robert Cuthbert), died in 1899.

Charles Connibere went to London as the firm's agent about 1895; when he returned in 1920, the brothers sold the firm to Sargood's, formed Connibere Bros and invested their money in city property. Shrewd businessmen, they always sold out at the top of the market and, as Ernest later acknowledged, worked in great harmony. They were reputed never to make a mistake in a business deal or in a charitable gift. Neither they nor their sister Emma Eliza, married. They lived quiet, abstemious lives in Toorak, 'model bachelors, reserved, correct to the point of austerity'.

Their list of known benefactions was considerable. In 1929 the brothers built three wards at the Orthopaedic Hospital, Mount Eliza. They and their sister paid for the building of the Young Women's Christian Association headquarters as a memorial to their father. Charles supported the Melbourne City Mission, the Victorian Institute of Hospital Almoners, and with George, the Eye and Ear Hospital. At the same time the brothers gave £5000 to the Prohibition League and an unnamed amount to the Sunday Christian Observance Council.

Their gifts rarely took the public eye, one exception being the cheque for £30,000 which Charles Connibere handed W. M. Hughes at a luncheon for the Jubilee Fund in 1935. He stipulated that the money be used to build a maternity wing at the Women's Hospital, and later gave a further £10,000 to ensure that the building opened debt free. In January 1936 Charles Connibere was appointed K.B.E. Both Sir Charles and George were active in church affairs, the first on the council of the Melbourne Diocese, the second a member of synod.

The demands of war increased their philanthropy. They bore the expense of the Young Men's Christian Association restroom in Elizabeth Street, where any man in uniform could have free refreshments, and they built Y.M.C.A. huts at Balcombe and Puckapunyal camps. At the time of his sudden death at Toorak on 25 June 1941, Sir Charles was on the board of numerous hospitals and charities (including the Red Cross). That year Ernest and George gave the Royal Melbourne Hospital £138,860 for a nurses' wing as a memorial to their brother. Two years later they gave £23,750 to St Andrew's Hospital for a similar wing. On 10 August 1945 George Connibere died after a long illness.

In 1945 and 1946 Ernest gave £10,000 to the Food for Britain Fund, and a further £10,000 each to the Melbourne City Mission, Ormond College and St Andrew's Hospital. He put up the money for a kindergarten at Port Melbourne, yet he considered his religious work more important than his charitable interests. He paid for two religious programmes on commercial wireless stations, distributed Sankey's hymn-books and supported schemes for the advancement of religious instruction.

Interviewed when he was 92, Ernest—still a dapper man in frock coat and butterfly collar—declared that his one hobby was 'service to my fellow man'. In pursuit of this aim, he and his brothers had donated well over £750,000 to charity and religion. Ernest died on 12 November 1957, leaving the remainder of his estate, valued for probate at £296,872, to charity.

History
David Shearer, who ran an agency business with his brother John in William Street, was the first owner-occupier of this house from 1863. Twenty years later it had been acquired by Reverend Edward T. Miles, of the William Street Independent Church (demolished), who leased it to Mrs. Hodges, Henry Wright and William Abbott before the turn of the century. The house was sited on a wood yard, operated by Shearer during the 1870-80 period.

Description/Notable Features
Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration, verandah roof and structure and an elaborate / high standard design of cement rendered surfaces. This house comprises two stages of development, presumably that of Shearer from the 1860's and more obviously that of the Rev. Miles in the 1880's. It is a highly decorated, two storey stuccoed brick house with a parapeted roof line, a two level cast iron verandah and an iron picket fence. The arched entablature and shell, the guilloche pattern parapet balustrading and the pronounced orbs, set on the parapet piers create a more richer than normal skyline profile. Paired brackets support the deep cornice, assisted by dentil mouldings above a swagged entablature frieze. An unusual aspect of the verandah is the central column to the upper level which does not continue to the ground. The cast iron is panelled complete with fringing and brackets, and the arched entrance portal possesses a spoked fanlight. The lower window bay with its corner, Corinthian pilasters and panelled sub sill wall face is uncommon, the whole appearing to be architect designed. Integrity - Generally original. Streetscape - Part of a superior group of houses, Nos, 13-19, which contrast with and complement the St. Mary's complex adjoining.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, of a common type but is near original, skilfully and richly decorated containing unusual details and is one major part of a late 19th and early 20th century civic residential streetscape, of high regional importance. Historically, the present form relates to the Rev. Miles and particularly to a church which has since been demolished, being its only physical memorial and once possessed a central role in the community and comprised part of a church precinct, of high regional significance.

Recommended Alterations
Recommendations - Repaint in original or typical colours, consider re-zoning to Special Residential 2 or similar, to preserve its house use and form.

History

The first owner-occupier of 15 Howard Street was Thomas Coultas, partner in a Swanston Street tailoring firm. (See also Southwell Coultas, 76,78,84 Molesworth Street). He owned the house from 1876 until 1885, but it was rented from 1879. After Coultas, other owner-occupiers were James Smith (1890) and John Quinlan (1896) an hotel broker of Collins Street.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration (unusual), verandah roof and structure and unpainted decorative brickwork.

Local builder, Thomas Noble, constructed this two storey, coloured brick and stucco, parapeted house with a two level cast iron verandah and sympathetic timber picket fence. The iron friezes and balustrading are panelled, the latter of an unusual lyre-shape design, whilst other sparse ornament includes vermiculation, panels and brackets on each side-wall. Like No. 13 the upper verandah post does not continue to ground. (Refer to No 13 Howard St)
Integrity - Generally original, the fence having been replaced/modified sympathetically. Streetscape - Part of a valuable row house precinct, adjoining the St. Mary's complex. (Refer 13 Howard Street).

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, a near original example of a common type, being distinguished by its iron and contributing to a streetscape, of regional significance. Historically, another speculative property, associated by ownership with businessmen, prominent in Melbourne, of local significance.

Recommended Alterations Fence (sympathetic - no recommendations) Part bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method). Recommendations - Repaint trim with typical or original colours, consider rezoning to Special Residential 2 or similar to preserve residential use and form.

History

In 1875, John Stedeford, who owned considerable property in both North and West Melbourne (Refer to 465-71, 473-83 Queensberry Street, and 279-85 Victorian Street), built this house and occupied it for ten years, when it passed into the hands of Thomas Moore of William Street (Refer 345-9 William Street). He leased it to Henry Taylor, Thomas Holloway and Walter Downing.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration, and verandah roof and structure. French door original? A two storey, wide frontage coloured brick and stucco house with a two level cast iron verandah, like Nos. 13, 15, the upper post does not continue to ground. The house is parapeted, with a cornice, but decoration is confined to the unusually fine panelled cast iron work (which incorporates the lyre pattern as does No. 15) and the nail head motif on the verandah side walls. French doors open to the upper verandah whilst wide brick arches have been placed in the adjacent brickwork. Integrity - The former timber picket fence may have been cut back or replaced and the brick arches have been closed in. Streetscape - Part of a valuable residential streetscape, adjoining the St. Mary's complex (Refer No 13 Howard).

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early generally original example of a common residential form, but possessing unusual cast iron and brickwork details and a part of a streetscape. Historically, a former residence of John Stedeford who built the important streetscape in Queensberry Street, between Chetwynd and Leveson Streets and completed many other projects in the inner metropolis as owner builder or owner, of high regional importance.

Recommended Alterations

Fence (sympathetic - no recommendations) Part bricks painted (inappropriate - remove by approved method) Recommendations - Replace picket fence as desired with spade head or original profile, repaint trim in original or typical colours, consider re-zoning to Special Residential 2 or similar to preserve residential use and form.

'WIRE TYING MADE EASY

Machines Do It Now

One of the most interesting mechanical developments in Australia in the post-war years has been that of automatic and semi automatic wire-tying machines for the reinforcing and sealing of boxes, cartons, and bundles. This has been brought about by the Gerrard Wire Tying Machines Co., Pty., Ltd., which had its origin in Victoria. It is a purely Australian concern. Eight different types of wire tying machines are manufactured in Australia, and the whole of the galvanised wire : strappings in gauges ranging from -No. 10, for use on very large, heavy cases of woollen goods, motor chassis parts, &c., down to No.19, used on parcel post packages, are drawn to Gerrard specifications by Australian steel wire mills. In addition to the complete range of wire tying machines' made, the Gerrard Company also , manufactures an efficient flat-band, strapping machine for use when wire is not considered suitable for a particular job. 'Tom an idea born in Australia, with machines largely developed here by Australian designers and engineers, Gerrard has built an Australian business with over 5000 users, who, in 1937, wire-strapped more than 25,000, 000 boxes and packages of primary and secondary products. The Brisbane office, in Makerston Street, and the Townsville agency (Swales Engineering Works)', carry stocks of machines and wire strapping. An efficient mechanical staff is carried for immediate service attention to users' machines.

'Huon and Derwent Times' (Tas. : 1933 - 1942) Tuesday 16 October 1934

'GERRARD WIRE TYING MACHINES.

Mr W. L. Gregory has come to Hobart especially to demonstrate Gerrard's latest machine for wire strapping fruit cases and the 'Gerrard Service -Fountain Stencil,' which operates in much the same way as the ordinary fountain pen, thereby being a great saver of time in the marking of fruit cases. Gerrard and Company's display and demonstration will be seen at G. N. Debnam's exhibit, and those orchardists who look for speed, economy and efficiency should not fail to visit this company's very instructive and interesting exhibit.'

'The Australasian' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1864 - 1946) Saturday 29 September 1928

'GERRARD WIRE TYING MACHINE PTY. LTD.

SURVEYED PLACES

A very interesting exhibit of wire-tying machine and packing-room appliances is being shown by the Gerrard Company, 119-125 Hawke street (qv). West Melbourne, in their attractive pavilion in Lennon avenue. The range of machines includes models for tying small cartons and parcels to the heaviest bale and package, using up to 8 gauge round bands of steel. The universal adoption of this economical and effective system for binding and sealing packages by manufacturers is shown by a statement recently issued by the company.

In Australia during the year 1925, six million cases were wire sealed; the following year the total increased to twelve millions, and during 1927 the amazing total of seventeen million packages were bound and scaled with the Gerrard machines. The better packing of Australian export apples is a feature of this exhibit. The standard softwood cases attractively labelled is shown in strong contrast to the stained hardwood dump, on which overseas buyers report so unfavourably. The introduction of the Adeco Lid Press facilitates easy lidding of the new case without bruising the top layers of the fruit, and the Trugrade Apple Gauge provides the best means for obtaining the "perfect pack".'

History

The house at 98 Ireland Street first appears in the Sands & McDougall directory for 1912, listed as 'vacant'. The first occupant was Robert Yound, who lived there until 1913. He was succeeded by James Brown, who is listed as the occupant from 1914 to 1917.

Description/Notable Features

Yangtsze is a single storey cottage in the Victorian Survival style. The walls are of constructed of rendered masonry and the roof is concealed behind a balustraded parapet. The facade has an entrance door and a pair of timber framed double hung sash windows with rendered sills are to one side of the timber door. The balustraded parapet which has a central pediment bearing the name 'Yangtsze' in raised lettering, and ornamented with paterae and a vermiculated panel. A brick chimney with terracotta pots penetrates the roof. The fence is not original.

Statement of Significance

Yangtsze, at 98 Ireland Street, West Melbourne, is of local historical and aesthetic interest. The house is representative of a minor phase of residential development in West Melbourne. Largely Victorian in detail and decoration but constructed c1911, the house is a particularly ornate example of the so called Victorian Survival style and makes a positive contribution to the streetscape.

Bronze sculpture

Corner of King and Jeffcott Streets, West Melbourne
Melbourne artist Andrew Rogers came to sculpture following a career in business. His work is well represented on Melbourne's streets, but he has been particularly successful internationally. His work has been commissioned in the Middle East, Europe and the Americas, and two of his largest works are installed in the Arava Desert, Israel, and the Atacama Desert, Chile. In June 1995, Central Equity Homes commissioned Rogers to design a sculpture to locate outside their West Melbourne residential development. The 6.5-metre City Living is the result of that commission. Cast in Fitzroy's Meridian Foundry, the sculpture consists of five naked figures, including an infant, balanced against half disks attached to a central column. Two of the disks feature iconography that links this 'family' to both the domestic space and the city fabric. While this is a large piece set on an imposing concrete base, a certain lightness is achieved through the aerial poses of the figures. City Living was donated to the City of Melbourne in 1996.'

`MANUFACTURE OF ELECTRICAL PLANT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir, — We noticed in "The Age" of yesterday in the letter by the Hydraulic Power Company addressed to the City Council, and published, in your paper, that they stated they did not know of any electrical plant manufacturers. We would like to correct this, as at present we are manufacturing one 2 h.p. electric motor, and 8 h.p. electric motor, and 15 h.p. electric generator, one 40 h.p. electric generator; and these- are for firms who have had our manufactured electric plants working for several years. We have also sent plants to Now Zealand and South Australia.—

Yours. &c

`The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Thursday 21 November 1907

`ELECTRICAL MACHINERY.

TO SUB EDITOR OP THE AGE.

Sir,— Several times recently we have read reports in your esteemed paper stating that electrical machinery could not be made here. We wish to say emphatically that electrical machinery can be manufactured here, and that we have for the last seventeen years manufactured same for all- purposes.

What we require to build this industry up to a proper footing is a protective duty of not less than 25 per cent., as in the old Victorian tariff. A bonus given for articles made would not meet the difficulty, as prejudice (which is steadily- dying out) is yet so strong that we should not have a chance while the importers are allowed to bring in machinery under a ridiculous 10 per cent, duty, as at present proposed. Trusting that a more reasonable view of this important industry will be taken by our legislators. — Yours. &c..

WM. CLAYTON-JOEL and Co.

`The Sydney Morning Herald' (NSW : 1842 - 1954) Tuesday 9 August 1910

`The Huddart Parker liner "Ulimaroo" is to have the Marconi wireless, apparatus installed almost immediately. The preliminary} work is now being carried out by Messrs Clayton Joel and Co- electricians. The vessel arrived on Saturday from New Zealand ports ...Up to the present no purely coastal steamer carries the system although the Makura of the Union line, which was engaged in Canadian Australian service and is now running between New Zealand Hobart and Melbourne has had wireless equipment for some time. The equipment ...in view of the early establishment of the shore stations by the Commonwealth Government.'

Thomas was born in Chipping Sodbury England on 28/1/1827 and emigrated to Australia in 1853 on board the Protector. He built a house known as "Glenhuntley" in Caulfield. He was originally with a firm known as Russell & Watts but the partnership dissolved and he continued with his own practice with his sons Harry & James. Many of their buildings are now under National Heritage orders. Thomas was one of the founders of the Victorian Institute of Architects, Melbourne's first city surveyor and President of Caulfield Shire in 1871.'

Statement of Significance for proposed Sands and McDougall Pty Ltd. complex

What is significant?

Sands and Kenny (1857-61) and Sands and McDougall, (1862-c1974) were the publishers of the directory to commercial and general Melbourne, later, the Melbourne and suburban directory and the 'Directory of Victoria' providing the longest issue of any other directory publisher in Victoria. They also published a directory of Canberra.

From their first retailing outlet, the Victoria Stationery Warehouse in Collins Street West (No.46) and stores in Little Flinders Street, their expansion provided for the erection of this factory building to the design of Thomas Watts and Sons, by builder F. Lavers of Hawthorn. Products made there included cardboard and paper containers, maps, those associated with book binding and general stationery and letterpress printing was combined with general publishing.

Thomas Watts and Sons accepted tenders for erection of the adjoining 3 level warehouse in Spencer Street, Melbourne in 1900 for Sands and McDougall Ltd. In 1914 Reynolds Bros of 118 Rose Street Fitzroy erected a factory for Sands and McDougall West Melbourne in Jeffcott Street designed by A and H Peck. [22]

The design firm, Thomas Watts and Sons, is also known for commercial buildings, such as Robb's Building (1866) formerly in Collins Street; stores for the City Property Co. in Flinders Lane (1889); stores for Alston and Payne in McKillop Street (1888) and the similarly gigantic and brick Victoria Sugar Company Works, Beach Street, Port Melbourne (since renovated as apartments).

Reputedly riveted wrought-iron columns and beams are the internal structure with timber floors fire-proofed by the Traegerwellbech arched corrugated plate linings, with in combustible infill. The former Victoria Bond 565-71 Lonsdale Street, Melbourne - a five-storey store claimed as the first to use the all-wrought-iron frame combined with the Traegerwellbech system, 1887, since demolished. As befits its manufactory function, ornament derived from the Italian Renaissance is applied sparingly (refer later Laurens - Munster Terrace complex).

Contributory elements include:

Main wing 1888-9

- a grand six-storey, red brick and stucco parapeted factory building set on the Jeffcott Street corner;
- symmetrically arranged three main façade bays, each with a hipped roof form over, as expressed by massive parapet pediments;
- cemented parapet cornice and string moulds dividing the storeys;
- basalt sills and voussoirs to formerly double-hung sash window openings;
- bracketed cement hood over the entry;
- painted wall signs with the firm's name on north and south sides;
- contribution as a period landmark being a major corner site, in original condition and with gigantic proportions set amongst low-rise neighbours and the centre-piece of an associated complex of red brick industrial buildings in the locality and the former Melbourne Remand Centre that was clearly inspired by this building.

Warehouse, Spencer Street 1900

- a three-storey, red brick and stucco parapeted warehouse adjoining the factory;
- symmetrically arranged three main façade bays, each with a hipped roof form over, as expressed by cemented parapet pediments, with flanking scrolls;
- cemented parapet cornice and string moulds dividing the storeys;
- basalt sills and voussoirs to formerly double-hung sash window openings;
- painted wall signs with the firm's name on north and south sides;

contribution as a period landmark being a major corner site, in original condition and with gigantic proportions set amongst low-rise neighbours and the centre-piece of an associated complex of red brick industrial buildings in the locality,

Openings altered with single pane glazing in place of double-hung sash windows, entry altered.

Jeffcott Street factory 1914

- face brick (bricks painted over) one level plus basement building set on stone paved lane between main building;
- double gabled parapeted roofline, corrugated iron clad roof behind;

Openings altered, entry altered.

How is it significant?

Sands and McDougall Ltd. factory and warehouse complex is significant historically and aesthetically to West Melbourne, the City of Melbourne and Victoria.

Why is it significant?

Sands and McDougall Ltd factory and warehouse complex is significant.

- Aesthetically, like many other warehouse or factory buildings of the period and earlier, this complex dominates its residential contemporaries in scale and adopts the Italian Renaissance Revival ornament of commercial designs current since the 1870s but in this case executed in red brick with stucco trim. The main building of 1888-9 is a large and original, prominently sited and competently ornamented 19th century factory building which possesses early use of all iron fire-proofed framing and was designed by the distinguished architectural firm, Thomas Watts and Sons. It is of State importance as an indicative and surprisingly original example of the fast disappearing large industrial buildings of the late 19th century;
- Historically, the complex includes the earliest known surviving and most substantial buildings linked with this most well known of stationery firms that had a national presence and is one of the most significant industrial complexes in Victoria, representing a specialised area of manufacture that differs from the more typical heavy industry.

'CARNIVAL AT NORTH MELBOURNE

On Saturday afternoon and evening a carnival was held on the -North Melbourne Recreation reserve in aid of the North and West Melbourne Red Cross Society and the North Melbourne branch of the Lady Mayoress Patriotic League. At half past 2 o'clock a procession of stockmen, firemen children in fancy costume and various comical characters left the town hall, and proceeded to the reserve headed by the North Melbourne Vice Regal Band. On the ground cycling races were run and a burlesque football match between the Association and League and Army and Navy played. In addition to the president of the committee (Councillor Davidson), Mrs J K Troup (president of the ladies committee) Miss Clack (Hon treasurer) and Miss E Mulcahy and Mr V E McKenna (joint hon secretaries), took an active share in the carnival. In the evening there was another procession from the city to the reserve, where an excellent programme was gone through consisting of moving pictures, bind selection of songs exhibitions by the Darktown Fire Brigade, and other forms of amusement.'

'ANZAC'S PLACE IN BRITAIN.

SPEECH BY LORD SOMERS.

North Melbourne War Memorial.

The unveiling of the granite column erected by the North and West Melbourne Red Cross Society at the corner of Victoria and Errol streets, North Melbourne as a memorial to those who fell in the war, took place yesterday afternoon in the presence of a large gathering. The ceremony was performed by His Excellency the Governor (Lord Somers), and Lady Somers subsequently laid the first wreath at the base of the memorial. This was followed by others placed in memory of dead relations and friends until the flowers rose to a height of several feet. Lord Somers said: - " Perhaps it is appropriate that I, as the representative of the Mother Country - and who in a greater degree than the mothers, can feel pride and gratitude when her sons rally round her in the hour of her need - should be given the privilege of taking an active part in this service of commemoration. The name Anzac is carved deeply in that old mother's heart, and generations to come will know what that name means. They will know that Anzac means loyalty, unselfish service, and sacrifice. For those who mourn a personal loss we pray that their memories of past happiness, their just pride in the achievements of their dead, and the possession of our deepest sympathy, may lighten the burden of their grief, and bring them peace.

In the world of to-day, with its speed and swift changes, memory is likely to be short lived. But this memorial has a message which will go out to us day after day and year after year. It stands as a perpetual reminder of the men and women of our flesh and blood who, in a cause which they knew to be right, gave up their lives. Its message to us is to carry on their tradition, and to revive and keep alight that spirit of good fellowship, unselfish service, and self sacrifice which they exemplified. Only thus can those ideals for which they died be brought to fruition."

Mr. Clement Davidson, president of the society, said that 1,240 men enlisted from North and West Melbourne, and of these 520 died on service. It was hoped that the sacred spot now dedicated would long be remembered as a memorial to their heroism. The memorial had cost £300 and this sum had been given by citizens. Mr. H. J. Martin, acting State president of the Returned Soldiers' League said that the men of the Australian Imperial Forces could only repair the loss of their fallen comrades to the community by living stronger lives in its service. The memorial should serve to call all Australians to maintain a citizenship which would be a pattern to all nations. Boy scouts and girl guides of various North and West Melbourne troops formed a guard of honour for Lord Somers. The children of all district Sunday schools were present. Prayer was offered by the Rev. R. C. M. Long, and the Rev. David Lewis read the Scriptures. The last Post was sounded by Mr. J. Page, and the Rev. D. Daley pronounced the Benediction. Singing was led by a united church choir, conducted by Mr. H. H. Alder, and music was supplied by the Returned Soldiers' Memorial Band, conducted by Mr. R. G. Abbott, and by the Footscray City Highland Pipe Band, conducted by Pipe-major J. Lawrie and Drum-major H. Hill. The monument was erected by H. B. Corbin and Sons Pty. Ltd.'

Former Phoenix Clothing Factory - Group Classification
 347-349 King Street, MELBOURNE, MELBOURNE CITY
 Statement of Significance
 Last updated on - August 23, 2005

Individual Statement of Significance : 347-349 King Street is an unusual three-storey stone and brick shop, residence and store complex, distinguished by its first floor loggia (the earliest known example) and its external integrity.

The section facing King Street dates from 1854-1859, while the ground floor of the rear store section is probably of the 1860's. The building is part of a coherent mid 19th century commercial streetscape.

Additions to the rear of the building relate to its use by the Phoenix Clothing Company, an early 1870's Melbourne clothing factory. This building appears to be a very rare survivor in the Central Business District, and amongst the earliest known surviving factories in the state. In fact, the whole of the building has important historical associations with the notable Fenwick Brothers, who owned it from the 1850's and founded the Phoenix clothing Company in 1870.

Orlando Fenwick (1822-1897), who once lived on the premises, was a prominent Victorian clothing manufacturer and importer, and took a leading role in Melbourne harbour development schemes. He was also a Melbourne City Councillor over a long period, and Lord

SURVEYED PLACES

Mayor. More recently the structure has associations with J.H. Langdon and company, wool merchants, who also owned the adjoining buildings at 351-355 King Street.

The site constitutes an important representation of Melbourne's nineteenth century industrial development, from the importation of clothing in the gold rush era to the establishment of the flourishing clothing manufacturing industry which occurred in the wake of post gold rush metropolitan growth and the introduction of tariff legislation in the 1970s.

The Phoenix factory was one of Melbourne's larger and more highly mechanised nineteenth century clothing manufacturers, and has been credited with introducing advanced overseas technology to Victoria. It appears to be a very rare survivor of early Central Activities District Manufacturers and amongst the earliest known surviving factories in the state. It is the only early Melbourne clothing factory which is known to survive. It is a survivor of an industry which has been especially important in Victoria's history, particularly in relation to the issues of protection and industrial legislation. This industry is also of key importance to new fields of historical research, such as the development of assembly line production processes and women in the workforce.

The essential design and structure of the complex provides a substantially intact representation of contemporary factory design and working conditions, and of aspects of nineteenth century building technology. Parts of its design may be directly related to the requirements of the Factory Acts for ventilation, sanitation and lighting.

Classified: 21/03/1990

Also part of a Group Classification with B1701 351- 5 King Street

Group Statement of Significance : 351-355 and 347-349 King Street, Robert Kidd's buildings (351-5) and the Fenwick Brothers complex (347-9) were both built in the period between the gold rush of the early 1850s and the development of the colony's secondary industries in the 1870s. Parts of each complex relate to both important historical phases, in particular the former Phoenix Clothing Factory at the rear of 347-9 King Street and Isaac Davidson's clothing factory at the rear of 355 King Street. These early factories share a party wall, were once united via twin archways, and are still linked by a pitched loading lane from King Street.

In King Street, the early date of the facades (1857 and 1856-9) distinguishes them among commercial streetscapes elsewhere in Melbourne and compares directly with the notable basalt stores of King Street South.

Victorian Heritage Register

VHR H0801

Last updated on - December 15, 1999

What is significant?

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is a three storey stone and brick shop, residence and store complex. It contains fabric from several different periods of building and alteration. The earliest section dates from the early gold rush era, while three storey additions were made in 1859 and the ground floor of the rear store/factory section probably dates from the 1860s. An 1869 photograph of the building showed a loggia, but this has been filled with windows.

How is it significant?

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical and architectural significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical significance as one of the oldest examples of a commercial building and factory in the State. Its King Street facade contains rare gold rush-era elements, from a time when King Street was an unmade although busy road with bullock drays and other carriers' wagons, loaded with goods, continually passing on their way to Bendigo and the other diggings. The factory proper dates from the 1860s and provides important evidence of the character of early industrial organisation in Melbourne. The Phoenix Clothing Company was established in the wake of post gold rush metropolitan growth and benefited from the introduction of tariff legislation in the 1870s. The Phoenix factory was one of the few mechanised 19th century clothing manufacturers, and has been credited with introducing advanced overseas technology to Victoria. Although there have been many structural changes to the building over the years, the essential design and structure of the complex provide a substantially intact representation of contemporary factory design and working conditions, and of aspects of 19th century building technology.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical significance as evidence of the character of Melbourne's early development. The combination of residence, shop and factory is a reminder of a time when the city was much more compact, and residence and workplace were often located in the same building or very nearby. The building also demonstrates the long-term continuity of industrial usage in this part of Melbourne.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of historical significance for its associations with the notable Fenwick Brothers, and Albion T. Walkley. The Fenwick Brothers were London clothing manufacturers and importers, who owned the site from the 1850s and established the Phoenix Clothing Company there in the 1870s. Orlando Fenwick (1822-1897) who once lived on the premises, was a prominent Victorian clothing manufacturer and importer. He also took a leading role in Melbourne harbour development schemes and was a Melbourne City councillor over a long period and Mayor of the city. Walkley, the factory manager from 1875 and owner of the manufacturing section of the business from 1878, was responsible for introducing into the Victorian clothing trade the innovative mechanical knife system of cutting which revolutionised the industry in the pre-WW1 period.

The Former Phoenix Clothing Company building is of architectural significance because of its first floor loggia, perhaps the earliest example in Melbourne (although it has subsequently been built in, it is restorable) and as part of a coherent mid-19th century commercial streetscape which gives some idea of the architectural character of this part of Melbourne in the post-gold

Notable features include stone masonry.

All three terrace houses are two storeys, constructed in brick with coursed bluestone facades. Access was directly off the street in the manner of English town houses. Each house has quoins, a motif which is repeated around the front door and windows. Whilst all three buildings are constructed on the street alignment the parapet and string course is not continuous, reflecting the differing stages of construction.

Statement of Significance

A group of three two-storey bluestone houses (one originally incorporating a shop) built between c1863 - 69. Their simple architectural form is indicative of their age.

They are significant remnants of the early residential settlement on the north-western fringe of the city.

Recommended Alterations

No. 353 - 355, Doors converted to windows (sympathetic - reinstate original design).

No. 351, shopfront added (sympathetic). Nos. 353-355, doors converted into windows (recommend reinstate original design)

Victorian Heritage Register VHR H0527

Last updated on - February 22, 2000

What is significant?

The Langdon Building at 351-355 King Street was built as three terrace houses by the owner-builder Robert Kidd. He built them in stages as follows: No.351 in 1863, No.353 in 1865 and No.355 in 1869. Kidd lived at No.353. The middle house of the three was a shop from 1870 but has now had its shopfront removed. All three terrace houses are two storeys, constructed in brick with coursed bluestone facades. Access was directly off the street in the manner of English town houses. Each house has quoins, a motif which is repeated around the front door and windows. Whilst all three buildings are constructed on the street alignment the parapet and string course is not continuous, reflecting the differing stages of construction. The Langdon Building was used as an early clothing factory and was later combined with the adjoining the Fenwick Brothers Phoenix Clothing building. These early factories share a party wall and were once linked via twin archways.

How is it significant?

The Langdon Building is of architectural and historical significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The Langdon Building is architecturally significant as an excellent example of the use of Victoria's ubiquitous bluestone as a construction material. Spanning three periods of construction, the Langdon Building has a consistent use of facing bluestone. There is a contrast between the fine ashlar finishes of the architraves, quoins and string courses and the rougher finish of the wall areas.

The Langdon Building is historically significant as a rare complex of three residential buildings amalgamated for industrial use. It is a rare example of a surviving clothing factory in the central business district. From 1870 the Langdon Building was a clothing factory and had a close relationship to the notable Phoenix Clothing Factory buildings to the south. It demonstrates the adaptation and adjustment of owners to changing economic conditions in Melbourne.

DEGREE NISI GRANTED.
 Melbourne, Aug. 21.

In the Divorce Court to-day Mary Ethel Brew, of the Bay View Hotel, King-street, West Melbourne, sought a divorce from John Charles Brew, commercial traveller. The petitioner was married at Melbourne on December 3, 1901, and there was one child.

The petitioner stated that after the marriage they left for Perth, where the respondent said that' he had a position at £500 a year. As a matter of fact he had no position, and he did no work there. She furnished a house and they lived on £400 which her mother had given her on her marriage.

In August, 1902, before the birth of the child, the respondent told her that she, would either have to go into a hospital or into the street. She returned to Melbourne, and, aided by her mother with money, took an hotel, where the respondent joined her again.

He made himself very unpleasant, accusing her of immorality. One of his habits was to sleep with a knife under his pillow. He drank and knocked her about. In March, 1905, he packed his bag and went away, and she had only seen him once since then. A decree nisi was granted.'

North and West Melbourne Conservation Study
(1983)

History - Michael Moran, who owned other hotels around the area built the Bay View Hotel on this site in 1864-5 and was also the publican until at least 1870. He continued to own the hotel for over ten years, when it was taken over by the West End Brewery, later in association with Carlton and United Breweries (1896).¹ Other licensees included Kierin Caulfield; 2 Miss Milton and Mary Rush. 3 (Refer 32-4 Capel Street)

Description - Builders. J. Holmes and later, James Healy, built this stuccoed brick and stone, parapeted hotel of two- storeys. 4 A simply moulded cornice, architraves and six-pane sashes denote the building's age. The remnants of a three room cottage (1867) survive on the north side. 5

Integrity - Generally original except new, unruled stucco and other minor aspects such as replacement of doorway and door.

Streetscape - Isolated corner element with some relationship to two two-storey row houses on the north and east sides (Walsh and King Street).

Significance - Architecturally, a typical corner sited.

Simply designed hotel building which exhibits a form used from early in Melbourne's history until the 1880s: of regional importance.

Historically, as an hotel, the social centre of the locality and associated with hotelier, Moran, who was also connected with the Rob Roy and Mansion House hotels in West Melbourne: of regional interest.

Recommendations - Repaint in typical or original colours;

consider restoration of doorway and door.

Not only one of Victoria's finest examples of the Brutalist style of Ludwig Mies van der Rohe, but also of especial note as the designers' own edge-of-town office for many years. It appears to have been one of the last self-designed architectural offices to be built in Melbourne until a resurgence in the late 1980s.'

Yuncken Freeman

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

'Yuncken Freeman Architects Pty Ltd. began as a practice when Otto (Rob) Yuncken (the son of master builder, Otto Yuncken) and John Freeman left their positions as senior associates in A & K Henderson. They were accompanied in their departure by John's brother, Tom Freeman, and William Balcombe Griffiths, also employees at A & K Henderson. In 1945 Roy Simpson was recruited into Yuncken Freeman on the recommendation of a fellow student during his time at the School of Design in Melbourne University. The new firm, Yuncken, Freeman Brothers, Griffiths & Simpson Architects, was located in the same Henderson Building, near the Mitre Tavern and its area was a social hub for a community of architectural firms, fellow students and friends from the Architectural Students' Society including Leslie M Perrott senior; Marcus Barlow; Bates, Smart & McCutcheon and others.

By the 1940s the operations of the firm was disrupted by World War II, which unavoidably grew to be a much serious threat than before. Rob Yuncken and Roy Simpson eventually enlisted into service, providing planning and design services to the U.S. Army Engineers Corps, for territory reclaimed by General MacArthur's campaign. When the dust settled in 1946, Yuncken and Simpson returned to Melbourne. Only to find the members of the original group scattered. They did however reunite to continue their practice.

In 1947, Yuncken Freeman Brothers Griffiths & Simpson Architects was appointed by the Victorian Government to initiate an emergency housing project in London. Simpson, who had experience during his days in the U.S. Army, headed the project where he provided designs for pre-built housing that could be assembled by unskilled labour. Fifty years later, these homes are still occupied. He was awarded the Gold Medal in 1997 by the Royal Australia Institute of Architects (RAIA) for his significant contribution to architecture.

From 1963 the firm was known as Yuncken Freeman Architects Pty Ltd. after the Royal Australian Institute of Architects approved the principle of architects practising as proprietary limited companies. Balcombe Griffiths and Roy Simpson (being the youngest of the original group) were the sole survivors of the five original partners, along with descendant John Yuncken, subsequently added Barry Patten and John Gates (1953), Robert Peck and Jamie Learmonth and others. Key staff included Angel Dimitroff (Myer Music Bowl) and Llew Morgan (Eagle Star and BHP House). Patten introduced the firm's characteristic international Modern style, based on the work of Mies Van Der Rohe, as seen in their 411 King Street offices, Eagle Star & BHP House. Robert Peck, as YFA managing director in the late 1970s and a City of Melbourne councillor, chaired the City's new committee on old buildings until he lost his seat in 1979. The advisory committee included representatives from the National Trust, Town & Country Planning Board, Ministries for Planning and Local Government, the Historic Buildings Preservation Council and the Building Owners and Managers Association (BOMA).

As with many architectural firms, YFA was forced to sack 15 architects and the 8 directors took a 20% pay cut in the mid 1970s, only 5 years after completion of the State Government Offices. Director, Barry Patten told 'The Age' newspaper "The situation is very bad- there just isn't any work available". Five years ago about 80% of their work had been in the private sector and the rest in Government but the situation had reversed by 1975, with government budget cuts and the private sector hardly moving. 'We have employed people for years and we are now finding it very difficult to keep them occupied. It is very worrying.'
`.....Flagstaff House 411 - 415 King Street, Melbourne, Australia 1968

Yuncken Freeman office

Typical of the Yuncken Freeman works led by Patten, Flagstaff house is very characteristic of the Chicago Modern. The building uses a simple ribbed steel cage structural system and sits low in Melbourne's skyline.

Designed to serve as offices, this building became home to the Yuncken Freeman firm in 1970. The interior was as elegant as the exterior with a vast open plan on two levels, fringed by glazed offices. All of the furniture was modular and black, slab sided to present working boxes as drafting tables. Gone were the jutting arms of drawing office machines, replaced by paralines or parallel straight edges, with adjustable acrylic T-squares.'

`Ah Cheung, a tea merchant in Little Bourke street, was summoned at the District Court yesterday, by Mr. George Donald, inspector of weights and measures, for using imperfect Beales in the business It was proved that the scales were three quarters of an ounce in favour of the defendant, and also that six of his weights were too light He WBB fined 20s , with 2s costs. A similar charge was preferred against Samuel J Hennessy, a butcher in Nicholson street Fitzroy, and evidence was given that his scales were improperly balanced, and that five of his weights were about two and a half ounces too light in the aggregate In this case a fine of 30s, with 20s costs, was imposed The scales and weights of both defendants were forfeited.'

`The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) 5 July 1878
`A case was heard ... at the District Police Court yesterday, in which Hugh McMonagle, a green-grocer, was summoned by Mr. George Donald, inspector of markets, for hawking without a licence. It was proved that the accused was selling potatoes in Berkeley-street, Carlton, on the 18th of last month. As it was his first offence, the inspector had expressed his willingness to withdraw the charge before entering court, if the defendant paid the usual dues and the expenses incurred in instituting the proceedings, but he had failed to do so. The defendant now assured the Bench that he would agree to and fulfil the complainant's conditions...'

`The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Friday 14 October 1881

`In the County Court yesterday, Francis Brown, who described himself as being out of business, sued George Donald, inspector of weights and measures, for damages. The defendant, in his capacity as inspector, seized a weighing-machine belonging to the plaintiff, on the ground that it was a false balance. The inspector subsequently brought an action in petty sessions against Brown for having false weights in his possession, and obtained a verdict, which was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court. The plaintiff now claimed damages from Donald for trespass and also for malicious prosecution, A technical point was raised, that according to the provisions of the Weights and Measures Statute, the action should have been brought within three months, and upon that ground the plaintiff was non suited. Mr Walsh appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr.Hood for the defendant.'

Victorian Heritage Register H2133*Victorian Heritage Register citation (H2133)What is significant?*

The underground men's public toilet in West Melbourne, built in 1938, is one of eleven built in Melbourne in the early twentieth century in response to public demand for public toilet facilities in Melbourne that were both sanitary and discreet. Street-level toilets were regarded as indecently open to public view. Underground toilets removed toilets from public view, and had already been built in Scotland, England and Sydney. The establishment in December 1890 of the Melbourne & Metropolitan Board of Works, responsible for building and maintaining an underground sewerage system, had provided the necessary infrastructure. The first underground public toilet in Melbourne, which included facilities for women as well as men, was opened in Russell Street in 1902. Several more were built before World War I: a men's in Queen Street in 1905; a men's and women's in Elizabeth Street opposite the Queen Victoria Market in 1907; a men's in Swanston Street in 1909 (now demolished); a women's in Elizabeth Street outside the GPO in 1910 (a men's was added in c1927); and a women's outside the Town Hall in Collins Street in 1914 (a men's was added c1960). A men's was built in Flinders Street in 1918. Four more were built in the inter-war period: this one in West Melbourne, one in Carlton, and two in East Melbourne (one of which has been demolished).

The underground public toilet is in a small park at the corner of King and Hawke Streets, West Melbourne, near the south end of the Errol Street shopping strip. Above ground elements are very similar to the earlier underground toilets built in Melbourne between 1902 and 1918, and consist of two stairway entrances enclosed by iron railings, iron gates and cast iron combined ventilation pipes and sign posts. An additional feature at ground level, found only on this toilet and the one in Carlton built in 1939, is the Moderne style polychrome brick ventilation shaft with decorative wrought iron panels. The toilet has now been decommissioned and the entrances are covered by concrete slabs. The condition of the interior is unknown.

Why is it significant?

The underground public toilet in West Melbourne is of historical and architectural significance to the state of Victoria.

How is it significant?

The underground public toilet in West Melbourne is of historical significance as one of the group of public toilets built in Melbourne in the early twentieth century which reflects an important era of sanitary, technological and social reform, as well as contemporary attitudes to public decency. It is a reflection of a major engineering achievement, the development of Melbourne's underground water, drainage and sewerage system, and the advances in sanitation and public health made possible, following the establishment of the Melbourne & Metropolitan Board of Works in 1890.

The underground public toilet in West Melbourne is of architectural significance as an example of an unusual building type, and of early twentieth century civic design. The iron railings, gates and columns and the brick ventilation shaft are of interest as examples of street furniture of the period.

`The Argus' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1848 - 1957) Tuesday 1 November 1887

`CITY COUNCIL ELECTIONS. Mr. J. W. PEIRCE AT WEST MELBOURNE

Mr. J. W. Peirce, the retiring councillor for Bourke Ward, met about 30 ratepayers at the James Watt Hotel, Spencer-street, last night. Dr. Lloyd occupied the chair. Mr. Peirce said that when he sought election three years ago he made many promises to the ratepayers, but he had never broken faith with them. It was in consequence of his action in the City Council that 75 extra lamps were erected in the ward, and the Flagstaff-gardens were improved, so that citizens could take their wives through them at night time. The 350 trees recently planted in the streets of the ward were the outcome of his energies. It had been proposed to erect a refrigerating room in the reserve of the Victoria Market, but he thought the land would be turned to better account if shops were erected on it, and he had this done. The shops already opened were returning 12 per cent, on the money expended on them. He acted on four committees of the council, and read a return of attendances to show that he was most regular. The work of the council was really done in committee, and not by those gentlemen who aired their eloquence at council meetings. It had always been his object to keep down the rating on citizens, and the council would soon be in such a position that it would not know what to do with its money. The Western Market would soon be acquired by it, and the returns which would be received from it would pay the expenditure of one ward.... While for 28 years their members of Parliament had been promising to obtain for them a recreation reserve, he had done so within six months of his election, and that was for no other reason than that he exercised some influence in both Parliament and the council.'

`The Age' (Melbourne, Vic. : 1854 - 1954) Monday 2 July 1906

ARBOR DAY, North and West Melbourne

`...The tree planting portion of the day's programme was then taken in hand, trees being planted by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Director of Education, Messrs. Aikman and Edgar, members of the board of advice and others. At the King-street school, West Melbourne, Arbor day was also duly observed. The morning was occupied in lessons bearing on trees and their cultivation, and in the afternoon the board of advice attended, and a squad of cadets paraded with the flag, and the bugle band played. Trees were planted in the ground, and a large number of visitors were present.'

Seabrook and Fildes

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

'Norman Hugh Seabrook was born in the Melbourne suburb of Northcote in 1906. He received his education at Brighton College, Wesley, and Hassets Commercial College Prahran, and gained his Architectural articles working for A.R. Barnes in 1924-26.[1] He continued his studies at the University of Melbourne Architecture Atelier from 1927-31, before working for 18 months in Britain and travelling in Europe, possibly gaining first-hand experiences of the Dutch Functionalists and working on projects influenced by them in Britain.[2] On his return to Melbourne in 1933 he won the competition to design the new MacRobertson Girls' High school, which he completed with the assistance of Alan Fildes, who he entered into partnership with in 1936. The partnership ended in 1956 with the death of Fildes. Seabrook taught briefly at the University of Melbourne in the 1950s, and continued practicing as Seabrook Hunt and Dale until his retirement in 1976. He died two years later in 1978...

Seabrook and Fildes was a Melbourne architecture practice that played a significant role in the introduction of modernist architecture to Victoria in the 1930s. They are most well known for the Dutch modernist inspired MacRobertson Girls High School, designed by Norman Seabrook in 1933.....

The partnership between Norman Hugh Seabrook (12 January 1906-9 September 1978) and Alan Fildes (1909-1956) was formally established in 1936, and was amongst the few in Victoria to show an influence of European modernism. By applying and adapting European modernist design principles to a broad range of civic, industrial, commercial and residential buildings, Seabrook and Fildes played a primary role in the dissemination of modernist architecture in Victoria. The practice operated as Seabrook, Fildes and Hunt from 1955 up until Fildes death in 1956, carrying on as Seabrook, Hunt and Dale until Norman Seabrook's retirement in 1976. ...MacRobertson Girls' High school was constructed in 1933-34 to Norman Seabrook's competition-winning design. It remains one of the first and best examples of Modernist architecture in Melbourne and was said by Robin Boyd to have signalled 'the 1934 revolution' of Victorian architecture.[5- Robin Boyd, Victorian Modern: One Hundred and Eleven Years of Modern Architecture in Victoria, Victorian Architectural Students Society, Melbourne, 1947,p.28] Influenced by Dutch Architect Willem Marinus Dudok's Hilversum City Hall, the school was arranged in a functionalist manner, breaking the program down into series of intersecting cream-brick volumes according to De Stijl principles, interrupted by large strips of red-framed windows and blue-glazed window sills.[6] The building was a radical departure from school buildings of the time, even including a rooftop classroom, and was the first Willem Marinus Dudok inspired building designed by Seabrook, the principles of which would be repeated and adapted through much of the practices later work'

'Statement of Significance

What is significant?

The MacRobertson Girls' High School at Albert Park, South Melbourne, was built in 1934 with funds donated by Sir MacPherson Robertson as a gift to the state of Victoria, celebrating the Centenary of its foundation. The building provided a permanent home for the former Melbourne Girls' High School, which was renamed in honour of its benefactor. The bold modern design, which had taken first prize in a strongly contested architectural competition for the new school, was prepared by the young architect Norman H Seabrook, at that time recently returned from working in Britain. Seabrook has been recognised in subsequent decades as a significant and talented architect and a major figure in the evolution of twentieth century architecture in Victoria.

How is it significant?

The MacRobertson Girls' High School is of architectural, historic and social significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The modern design of the school, clearly informed by Seabrook's first hand knowledge and experience of the work of leading contemporary Dutch architect Willem Dudok and his followers on the Continent and in Britain, was revolutionary for Victoria at this time and was influential in the introduction of the modern modes and the growth in their acceptance in the 1930s in this state. The planning of the school was refined in terms of its conceptual clarity, its traffic efficiency, and the skilful zoning of the various activities within the school, and established a new standard to be emulated in the many schools produced in the following decades by the Public Works Department under chief architect Percy Everett.

The exterior retains much of its significant character and fabric despite the impact of some changes and additions. A number of the interiors of the school were also notable, and despite some superficial changes these retain the bulk of their original fabric substantially intact.

The MacRobertson Girls' High School has important historical associations with noted industrialist and philanthropist Sir Michael MacPherson Robertson, who donated over £100,000 to the state of Victoria as a gesture of goodwill and thanks in the year of its centenary. £40,000 of this money was set aside for the new school. The school is also of significance for its associations with its direct antecedents: the Model School in Spring Street; the Melbourne Continuation School, Victoria's first state secondary school, later renamed Melbourne High School; and Melbourne Girls' High School, the first single sex girls' state secondary school in Victoria. Each of these schools has played a notable part in the evolution of the state's education system, as has the MacRobertson Girls' High School.

The MacRobertson Girls' high School has social significance as one of Victoria's premier education institutions, as a major school for girls, and alongside the Melbourne High School and the University High School, as one of three high schools recognised as outstanding and special within the state secondary education system. It has additional significance for its links with past students and staff, many of whom have enjoyed distinguished careers and public note.

Design by Shalless:

`What is significant?

Ross House, formerly called Charleville, 292 COTHAM ROAD KEW, Boroondara City was built as a two-storey mansion in 1889 for Charles Donaldson. It was designed in the Italianate style by the architect H Shalless (sic) and built by G Ginham. Dr Tom King, surgeon purchased Charleville from Donaldson in 1939 and renamed it Ross House.

How is it significant?

Ross House is of historic and architectural significance to the State of Victoria

Why is it significant?

Ross House is of historical importance to the State of Victoria for its association with Melbourne's urban development. The house is historically important in illustrating late nineteenth century social values and the importance of establishing status through the construction of an imposing residence. Ross House, a substantially intact mansion of the nineteenth century 'boom period, is architecturally important in exhibiting good design and the aesthetic characteristics in a domestic application of the Italianate style.'

History

Hugh Houston moved from further south in King Street to No 583 King Street after he had built these houses in 1883.

They were built in the name of his wife, Mary. He continued to own the houses for over ten years, residing there until after 1885 when he probably moved to Flemington. Tenants in the other houses included David Dawson, John Reed and James Bowman.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure. Prolific local architect, Henry Shalless designed, and local builders, Butler and Gunn, constructed these two stuccoed brick, two storey houses. They are parapeted, with distinctive full arched entablatures, shells, and flanking piers and urns above the scrolled name panel. Two level cast iron verandahs shelter arched and architraved windows, with pilasters, whilst the entrance has a spoked fanlight connected to panelled side lights. Iron picket fences are used at the frontage.

Integrity - Urns gone from No. 583 parapet.

Streetscape - Valuable corner element of a richly decorated residential streetscape from Roden to Hawke Streets.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, one of the relatively small number of architect designs within this common form type, the houses are near original, ornamented in a competent manner and are a valuable part of a significant streetscape of high regional importance. Historically, two of a row of speculative houses, aimed at an aspiring market, and associated with an old West Melbourne resident, Houston, who developed a number of other properties in the area ; of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Colours (sympathetic - no recommendations) Parapets
orbs gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Recommendations - Repaint in original or typical colours,

Design by Shalless:

`What is significant?

Ross House, formerly called Charleville, 292 COTHAM ROAD KEW, Boroondara City was built as a two-storey mansion in 1889 for Charles Donaldson. It was designed in the Italianate style by the architect H Shalless (sic) and built by G Ginham. Dr Tom King, surgeon purchased Charleville from Donaldson in 1939 and renamed it Ross House.

How is it significant?

Ross House is of historic and architectural significance to the State of Victoria

Why is it significant?

Ross House is of historical importance to the State of Victoria for its association with Melbourne's urban development. The house is historically important in illustrating late nineteenth century social values and the importance of establishing status through the construction of an imposing residence. Ross House, a substantially intact mansion of the nineteenth century 'boom period, is architecturally important in exhibiting good design and the aesthetic characteristics in a domestic application of the Italianate style.'

History

Hugh Houston moved from further south in King Street to No 583 King Street after he had built these houses in 1883.

They were built in the name of his wife, Mary. He continued to own the houses for over ten years, residing there until after 1885 when he probably moved to Flemington. Tenants in the other houses included David Dawson, John Reed and James Bowman.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure. Prolific local architect, Henry Shalless designed, and local builders, Butler and Gunn, constructed these two stuccoed brick, two storey houses. They are parapeted, with distinctive full arched entablatures, shells, and flanking piers and urns above the scrolled name panel. Two level cast iron verandahs shelter arched and architraved windows, with pilasters, whilst the entrance has a spoked fanlight connected to panelled side lights. Iron picket fences are used at the frontage.

Integrity - Urns gone from No. 583 parapet. Streetscape - Valuable corner element of a richly decorated residential streetscape from Roden to Hawke Streets.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, one of the relatively small number of architect designs within this common form type, the houses are near original, ornamented in a competent manner and are a valuable part of a significant streetscape of high regional importance. Historically, two of a row of speculative houses, aimed at an aspiring market, and associated with an old West Melbourne resident, Houston, who developed a number of other properties in the area ; of local importance.

Recommended Alterations

Colours (sympathetic - no recommendations) Parapets
orbs gone (inappropriate - reinstate original design)

Recommendations - Repaint in original or typical colours,

History

Edith Stones had these two houses built in c1890-5, 1903-4 on a site previously occupied by Frederick Stones (qv) Wooden house. She lived in No. 595 King Street and leased the other house to Mrs. Jane Kerr and Thomas Oliver, who had earlier lived in No. 599 King Street. The Stones family had developed many properties in this area. (Refer Nos. 589-91 King Street).

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure. Unusual porch and notable gates. A two storey, parapeted row house pair with two level cast iron verandahs, iron fences and rectangular entablatures, flanked by scrolls. An unusual part is the stuccoed porch which links the verandah with the boundary, this is clumsily integrated into the standard format with the bracketed corbel which terminates the verandah side wall being matched, in a differing role on the opposing side of the portal. Integrity - Generally original, parapet urns/orbs may be missing. Streetscape - Contributive part of a valuable residential streetscape.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an unusual late and near original, variation on a common type which has been built with the 19th century Italian Renaissance vocabulary, in a period when Medieval derived stylism had been active for over a decade also a contribution to a significance streetscape which epitomises this earlier period; of regional importance. Historically, one of the later Stones family developments and one of many in that street and the area; of local importance.

History

Edith Stones had these two houses built in c1890-5, 1903-4 on a site previously occupied by Frederick Stones (qv) Wooden house. She lived in No. 595 King Street and leased the other house to Mrs. Jane Kerr and Thomas Oliver, who had earlier lived in No. 599 King Street. The Stones family had developed many properties in this area. (Refer Nos. 589-91 King Street).

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure. Unusual porch and notable gates. A two storey, parapeted row house pair with two level cast iron verandahs, iron fences and rectangular entablatures, flanked by scrolls. An unusual part is the stuccoed porch which links the verandah with the boundary, this is clumsily integrated into the standard format with the bracketed corbel which terminates the verandah side wall being matched, in a differing role on the opposing side of the portal. Integrity - Generally original, parapet urns/orbs may be missing. Streetscape - Contributive part of a valuable residential streetscape.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an unusual late and near original, variation on a common type which has been built with the 19th century Italian Renaissance vocabulary, in a period when Medieval derived stylism had been active for over a decade also a contribution to a significance streetscape which epitomises this earlier period; of regional importance. Historically, one of the later Stones family developments and one of many in that street and the area; of local importance.

 `INTERESTING WILL CASE.
 JAMES OLIVER'S ESTATE.

In the First Civil Court yesterday, before Mr Justice Hodges, the hearing of the case arising out of the will of the late James Oliver, of West Melbourne, was continued. Under the will property to the value of over £ 12,000 is bequeathed to testator's son Thomas Oliver, and his wife, the personally, £5,270 absolutely, and the realty, £7,020, in trust for their children.

Against this will Isabella Hutton, daughter of testator, and J. S. Oliver, a grandson, have entered caveats, and the case is being taken on the first one. The grounds of objection are (a) that the will was not executed by testator: (b) want of testamentary capacity, (1) confined to the period shortly before and at the time of execution, (2) existing before such period and due to imbecility, of which the symptoms first manifested themselves on or about November 1, 1898; (c) undue influence exercised by the applicants, Thomas Oliver and Jessie Stirling Christie Oliver; (d) the documents did not express the testator's will.

Mr. Duffy, K. C., and Mr. Stark (instructed by Mr. C. J. M'Farlane) appeared for the executors and executrix, Thomas Oliver, W. B. P. Crocket, and Jessie Stirling Christie Oliver, in support of the will; and Mr. Purves, K.C., and Mr. Agg (instructed by Messrs. Fink, Best, and Hall) appeared for the caveator.

Thomas Oliver, one of the beneficiaries, continuing his evidence, said his father had spoken about getting his will made, but refused to go to a lawyer. He said lawyers "are a' scoundrels." (Laughter.)

After his father had spoken more than once the witness got a will form, and at his father's request made a will out in favour of himself and his wife, but that was never executed, and later his father produced a will of December 1 last, drawn up by Crocket. As his wife's name was not put in in full he pointed this out, and his father on December 5 handed him the contested will, asking him to keep it. His wife handed it back, saying that testator might wish to alter it. His father was mentally clear and physically strong for his age at the time he made the will, and continued to be so afterwards. He related the different dealings with properties given to other members of the family by testator before his death. Cross-examined by Mr. Purves, witness said he had been under medical treatment recently.

For alcoholic poisoning?-- I presume that is it.

Witness (continuing); -- His father knew of his drinking habits, but had never complained of them. He had never been told he had delirium tremens. He left the Union Steamship Company in 1888, when the inspector had ordered him to the head office in Dunedin to submit to inquiry.

When he resigned he had about £300 in the Metropolitan Bank. He had got debentures from his brother-in-law, Mr. Hutton, to repay debenture he had borrowed from an estate he was trustee for several years ago. When he went out of the firm of Dean, Clark, and Co. in 1895, he got the money he paid into the firm back in cash and bills. He had never heard that his father promised his brothers on their deathbeds to look after their families.

Under the will of 1892, the estate was divided into fourths, one to go to each child or his or her issue, subject to a deduction of any advances made in testator's lifetime.

Mr. Purves, -- There were no breaches between your father and his children or their descendants between that will and your alleged will? -- Certainly there were with the boys in connection with properties at Gembrook and

SURVEYED PLACES

Narre Warren.

Those were after the date of the last will?-- I cannot say that for certain. I do not know why my father left me no personal interest in the estate in the will of March, 1898, and did not make me an executor.

Did he not tell you he would cut you off with a shilling, and you said, "Give me the shilling, and I'll go and get two drinks"?- No. (Laughter.)

Witness (continuing), -- He did not dictate the instructions his father took to Crocket. He would not swear for his wife at all. He had not taken steps to keep members of his family from seeing his father alone.

James Scott Ridley, retired bank manager gave evidence that the testator was a shrewd, capable man at the time the will was made and afterwards.

Jessie S. C. Oliver, wife of Thomas Oliver, and one of the beneficiaries under the will, said she had handed the document back to testator, saying he might want to alter it, but he replied that he did not change like the wind. Mrs. Hutton was the only one who objected when the will was read, and she said it was most unjust. Visits had been exchanged between testator and other members of the family freely, but not so frequently of late years. Testator had complained of the conduct of certain of his grandchildren.

To Mr. Purves,-- She did not prevent any members of the family from seeing testator alone. She did not hear testator say after making the last will that he was going to leave his property equally. Some time before the accident her husband was drunk, and Mr. Oastler came in and held him. She did not complain of his treatment, nor did the testator say that he had knocked his old father down.

Joseph Whitaker, medical practitioner, said that he knew testator, and had not noticed anything to show he was suffering from mental decay.

Reverend James Gibson gave evidence that the testator was a mentally and physically strong man, "as strong as most Scotchmen, and that is saying a good deal." (Laughter.)

Mr. Purves,--Are you a Scotchman?--No; I'm an Australian, but -I was a Scotchman.

I presume he was Scotch enough, and sane enough, to put 3d. in the plate rather than 6d.?--That is not always a Scotch characteristic.

Andrew Shiels, medical practitioner, said he had known testator for years, and looked upon him as a shrewd and thrifty man.

To Mr. Purves,-- When he was asked his opinion he had said that testator was perfectly capable of making a will, but certainly it was not what he would have expected of him, and he could not understand him putting his son in the position of trustee. He had written that he could not understand him making such a will as that in question.

William Low, medical practitioner, also gave evidence of testator's strength of mind and body.

To Mr. Purves,--He had treated Thomas Oliver several times in the last two and a half years for alcoholism. You prepared him for this trial?--Yes

He wanted patching up?-- I suppose so. Did you patch him up for the funeral of his father?--Witness hesitated.

Come along, you'll leave all the lawyers in town after you if you go on. Did you?--

Yes.

Several other witnesses of the testator's capability of managing his own affairs having been examined, the hearing of the case was adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning.'

As James Oliver was a carpenter by trade he built these homes, although some years apart, No. 599 King Street in 1874-75 and No. 601 King Street in 1879. He continued to own them for over twenty years, residing in No 599 until he passed it on in 1884 to Thomas Oliver presumably his son. Tenants in No. 601 included George Stooke, the butcher, James Deas and Andrew Shiels.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure. Unusual pattern balustrade. A two storey, wide frontage, stuccoed brick and parapeted row house pair with a two level cast iron verandah, iron fence and arched parapet entablature with flanking scrolls and associated urns. The iron balustrade is of an unusual pattern (possibly imported) whilst the more typical friezes are set in panels. A large top and side lit entrance doorway is unusual for the early construction date. Integrity - Generally original.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a valuable residential streetscape.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early generally original example of a common form with interesting details also part of a significant streetscape, of regional significance.

Historically, another example of a builder- owner-developer who chose to live in his product and thus has built a relatively well appointed pair of houses.

SURVEYED PLACES

In the First Civil Court yesterday, before Mr Justice Hodges, the hearing of the case arising out of the will of the late James Oliver, of West Melbourne, was continued. Under the will property to the value of over £ 12,000 is bequeathed to testator's son Thomas Oliver, and his wife, the personally, £5,270 absolutely, and the realty, £7,020, in trust for their children.

Against this will Isabella Hutton, daughter of testator, and J. S. Oliver, a grandson, have entered caveats, and the case is being taken on the first one. The grounds of objection are (a) that the will was not executed by testator: (b) want of testamentary capacity, (1) confined to the period shortly before and at the time of execution, (2) existing before such period and due to imbecility, of which the symptoms first manifested themselves on or about November 1, 1898; (c) undue influence exercised by the applicants, Thomas Oliver and Jessie Stirling Christie Oliver; (d) the documents did not express the testator's will.

Mr. Duffy, K. C., and Mr. Stark (instructed by Mr. C. J. M'Farlane) appeared for the executors and executrix, Thomas Oliver, W. B. P. Crocket, and Jessie Stirling Christie Oliver, in support of the will; and Mr. Purves, K.C., and Mr. Agg (instructed by Messrs. Fink, Best, and Hall) appeared for the caveator.

Thomas Oliver, one of the beneficiaries, continuing his evidence, said his father had spoken about getting his will made, but refused to go to a lawyer. He said lawyers "are a' scoundrels." (Laughter.)

After his father had spoken more than once the witness got a will form, and at his father's request made a will out in favour of himself and his wife, but that was never executed, and later his father produced a will of December 1 last, drawn up by Crocket. As his wife's name was not put in in full he pointed this out, and his father on December 5 handed him the contested will, asking him to keep it. His wife handed it back, saying that testator might wish to alter it. His father was mentally clear and physically strong for his age at the time he made the will, and continued to be so afterwards. He related the different dealings with properties given to other members of the family by testator before his death.

Cross-examined by Mr. Purves, witness said he had been under medical treatment recently.

For alcoholic poisoning?-- I presume that is it.

Witness (continuing); -- His father knew of his drinking habits, but had never complained of them. He had never been told he had delirium tremens. He left the Union Steamship Company in 1888, when the inspector had ordered him to the head office in Dunedin to submit to inquiry.

When he resigned he had about £300 in the Metropolitan Bank. He had got debentures from his brother-in-law, Mr. Hutton, to repay debenture he had borrowed from an estate he was trustee for several years ago. When he went out of the firm of Dean, Clark, and Co. in 1895, he got the money he paid into the firm back in cash and bills. He had never heard that his father promised his brothers on their deathbeds to look after their families.

Under the will of 1892, the estate was divided into fourths, one to go to each child or his or her issue, subject to a deduction of any advances made in testator's lifetime.

Mr. Purves, -- There were no breaches between your father and his children or their descendants between that will and your alleged will? -- Certainly there were with the boys in connection with properties at Gembrook and

Narre Warren.

Those were after the date of the last will?-- I cannot say that for certain. I do not know why my father left me no personal interest in the estate in the will of March, 1898, and did not make me an executor.

Did he not tell you he would cut you off with a shilling, and you said, "Give me the shilling, and I'll go and get two drinks"?-- No. (Laughter.)

Witness (continuing), -- He did not dictate the instructions his father took to Crocket. He would not swear for his wife at all. He had not taken steps to keep members of his family from seeing his father alone.

James Scott Ridley, retired bank manager gave evidence that the testator was a shrewd, capable man at the time the will was made and afterwards.

Jessie S. C. Oliver, wife of Thomas Oliver, and one of the beneficiaries under the will, said she had handed the document back to testator, saying he might want to alter it, but he replied that he did not change like the wind.

Mrs. Hutton was the only one who objected when the will was read, and she said it was most unjust. Visits had been exchanged between testator and other members of the family freely, but not so frequently of late years. Testator had complained of the conduct of certain of his grandchildren.

To Mr. Purves,-- She did not prevent any members of the family from seeing testator alone. She did not hear testator say after making the last will that he was going to leave his property equally. Some time before the accident her husband was drunk, and Mr. Oastler came in and held him. She did not complain of his treatment, nor did the testator say that he had knocked his old father down.

Joseph Whitaker, medical practitioner, said that he knew testator, and had not noticed anything to show he was suffering from mental decay.

Reverend James Gibson gave evidence that the testator was a mentally and physically strong man, "as strong as most Scotchmen, and that is saying a good deal." (Laughter.)

Mr. Purves,--Are you a Scotchman?--No; I'm an Australian, but -I was a Scotchman.

I presume he was Scotch enough, and sane enough, to put 3d. in the plate rather than 6d.?--That is not always a Scotch characteristic.

Andrew Shiels, medical practitioner, said he had known testator for years, and looked upon him as a shrewd and thrifty man.

To Mr. Purves,-- When he was asked his opinion he had said that testator was perfectly capable of making a will, but certainly it was not what he would have expected of him, and he could not understand him putting his son in the position of trustee. He had written that he could not understand him making such a will as that in question.

William Low, medical practitioner, also gave evidence of testator's strength of mind and body.

To Mr. Purves,--He had treated Thomas Oliver several times in the last two and a half years for alcoholism. You prepared him for this trial?--Yes

He wanted patching up?-- I suppose so. Did you patch him up for the funeral of his father?--Witness hesitated.

Come along, you'll leave all the lawyers in town after you if you go on. Did you?--

Yes.

Several other witnesses of the testator's capability of managing his own affairs having been examined, the hearing of the case was adjourned till 10 o'clock this

History

As James Oliver was a carpenter by trade he built these homes, although some years apart, No. 599 King Street in 1874-75 and No. 601 King Street in 1879. He continued to own them for over twenty years, residing in No 599 until he passed it on in 1884 to Thomas Oliver presumably his son. Tenants in No. 601 included George Stooke, the butcher, James Deas and Andrew Shiels.

Description/Notable Features

Notable features include the fence, verandah decoration and verandah roof and structure. Unusual pattern balustrade. A two storey, wide frontage, stuccoed brick and parapeted row house pair with a two level cast iron verandah, iron fence and arched parapet entablature with flanking scrolls and associated urns. The iron balustrade is of an unusual pattern (possibly imported) whilst the more typical friezes are set in panels. A large top and side lit entrance doorway is unusual for the early construction date. Integrity - Generally original.

Streetscape - Contributing part of a valuable residential streetscape.

Statement of Significance

Architecturally, an early generally original example of a common form with interesting details also part of a significant streetscape, of regional significance.

Historically, another example of a builder- owner-developer who chose to live in his product and thus has built a relatively well appointed pair of houses.
